

WHICH BEER GLASS IS BIGGER?

PRICE BOOST OPPOSED

Dime Beer Faces Cut in Quantity

The price may remain, but the quantity won't be the same. This is the warning flashed to those who favor a dime glass of beer in B.C. pubs, following a closed session of the B.C. Hotels Association annual convention at Vancouver Tuesday.

Hotel operators say they are faced with rising costs, and something must be done about the price of beer.

Two courses have been suggested:

A reduction in size of the present 7 1/2-ounce glass to seven ounces, keeping the price at 10 cents;

Or an increase in the price per glass.

Reports are that most operators favor retaining the dime price, reducing size of the glass.

B.C. Hotel Association president

Oscar Matson, Penticton, said "we still want the 10-cent glass of beer."

Vancouver hotelman Mike Kohut expressed preference for a larger glass and a price increase.

Any recommendations on price increase or glass size will have to be approved by the full membership of the association, then forwarded as a recommendation to the provincial government for possible action.

Foodless a Week Canadians Safe In Small Ketch

ROTTERDAM (Reuters)—Two young Canadian adventurers, sighted in their storm-battered ketch Orenda in the Atlantic five days ago after they were given up for lost, went for almost a week without tasting solid food, it was learned here today.

Leonidas Angelides, Greek-born captain of the Liberian steamer Mariblanca, today told how the starved, exhausted sailors turned down his offer to bring them to safety.

Angelides, who arrived here today, said the Orenda was spotted from his ship because a sharp lookout had been ordered for survivors or wreckage of the United States Air Force Liftmaster reported lost in the area.

CAME ABOARD

The Mariblanca hove to in rough seas, the ketch came alongside, the two sailors—Bert Smith, 31, of Toronto, and Alan Battersby, 29, formerly of Blackpool, England,—stumbled aboard the steamer, muttering: "Thank God, captain, God is good."

The 27-foot Orenda sailed for Europe from North Sydney, N.S., on Sept. 1. The tiny ketch, was sighted in mid-Atlantic Sept. 22 by the United States liner America.

The America circled the ketch for 40 minutes, but saw no sign of life aboard and it was feared the boat was derelict. Relatives of Smith and Battersby were informed that the men were considered lost at sea.

Today, Angelides said the men were tired and wet, but in fairly good condition when he spoke to them last Saturday. He said Battersby had a slight rash.

British Aid To Jordan Not Automatic

LONDON (AP)—Britain said today it will have to satisfy itself completely that Jordan has been the innocent victim of aggression before fighting alongside it in a war.

This clearly indicated that British aid would not be automatic if Jordan announced it was attacked.

A foreign office spokesman also made it plain at a press conference that the British government—and not British military commanders on the spot—will decide if action is warranted under the British-Jordan alliance.

JERUSALEM (AP)—Israel today denied Arab charges that she is massing troops on Jordan's frontier. The Israelis said the accusation is a screen to mask Jordan's own military activities.

Fourth False Bomb Report Recorded Here

Fourth bomb hoax in Victoria this year spurred quiet search of the Plaza Theatre Tuesday at 4:35 p.m., but police detectives found no bomb or threat of danger.

It was the second time an anonymous phone call, sent police on a search of the Plaza since April.

The call was received by police, who reported the caller, sounding like a teen-aged boy, said, "There's a bomb in the Plaza Theatre"—then hung up.

NO EVACUATION

Theatre management decided against evacuating the premises, but aided in a search as a precaution.

Patrons were cleared of the Plaza April 4 and the Odeon was evacuated Sept. 26 when similar calls were received. On Sept. 10, Trans-Canada Airlines management got a prankster's call saying a bomb had been planted in a Vancouver-bound airliner at Patricia Bay airport.

Winnipeg Policeman Held for Extortion

WINNIPEG (CP)—A Winnipeg policeman with more than 10 years' service today was charged with extortion following his arrest in the Port Rouge district Tuesday night after a chase in which pursuing detectives fired three warning shots.

Const. Daniel McClure, 32, was remanded without plea until Oct. 25 and released on $100 bail.

Inspector of detectives James Toal said that on Oct. 4 a middle-aged Port Rouge man received an anonymous telephone call saying he could avoid publicity of a recent court case in which he was involved by paying an unspecified amount of money. When he replied he did not have that kind of money, the caller allegedly told him to get it and he would be called later.

60,000 AT SEATTLE

Ike Didn't Miss A Trick on Tour

SEATTLE (AP)—President Eisenhower came West Tuesday on his biggest vote hunt of the campaign—and got an enthusiastic reception along the way.

The biggest crowd—and the most enthusiasm—came at St. Paul and Minneapolis, where Eisenhower stopped off for a couple of noon speeches. And he had a fair-sized crowd to greet him here at Seattle, even though he didn't arrive until 5:35 p.m.

In addition to trying to pick up some electoral votes for himself on this trip, Eisenhower obviously hopes to help some local candidates such as Republican Governor Arthur B. Langlie.

The governor, in a red-hot race trying to win Democrat Warren Magnuson's seat, was at the airport to greet Eisenhower. So was Edgar Eisenhower, the President's brother, who lives in Tacoma, Wash., and at whose home he will spend tonight.

There were gaps in the crowd Tuesday night on the four-mile trip in from the airport, but Eisenhower didn't miss a trick. Every time he came to a cluster of potential voters, he was on his feet, waving his hat.

When he hit downtown

President Eisenhower's Seattle address tonight will be carried by television channels 5, 11 and 12, commencing at 8.

Seattle, business picked up and Eisenhower stayed on his feet, waving. Police Captain Jack Porter estimated 60,000 persons watched as the President traveled from the airport to his hotel.

Eisenhower campaigned hard Tuesday and went to bed early last night—"tired but happy," as his press secretary, James C. Hagerty, put it. Today—the second day of a five-day tour into five states—the president's staff kept his schedule clear of engagements to give him time to work on tonight's speech in Civic Auditorium and those he will make the rest of the week in Oregon, California and Colorado.

Yesterday, in the Minneapolis and St. Paul areas, Eisenhower rode about 30 miles in an open car and he stood, waving to the crowds, just about all the way. He did the same on the ride from the airport here.

In Tacoma tomorrow, Eisenhower will make a mid-day talk at a rally at the College of Puget Sound, then fly on to Portland, Ore., for a major nationwide television address there in the evening.

FORMER PRESIDENT of the Canadian Pacific Railway, D. C. Coleman, died today. He was 77. (See page 15.)

Egypt Ready To Talk

CAIRO (AP)—President Nasser's chief political aide said today exploratory discussions with Britain and France about a Suez settlement may begin next week, probably in Geneva.

Wing Cmdr. Ali Sabry, arriving home from last week's United Nations Security Council debate on the Suez issue, told Egyptian reporters the negotiations would be based on the six-point formula approved by the Security Council.

Sabry insisted that "Egypt will not accept international control" of the canal that President Nasser took over July 26.

ASKS FOR VIEWS

Prime Minister Eden and French Premier Mollet, in a joint statement Tuesday night, asked Egypt again to put forth a plan for operation of the canal which would guarantee its free international use as effectively as the international control demanded by Britain and France.

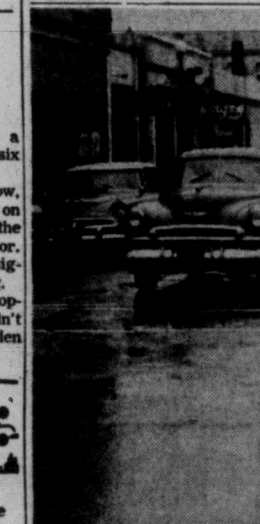

Until Egypt proposes such an alternative, Eden and Mollet said, their governments will stick to their demand for internationalization.

There was no immediate official reaction in Cairo to the Eden-Mollet statement.

Eden and British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd flew to the French capital unexpectedly Tuesday for an evening of urgent consultations on the Suez dispute. Lloyd had just returned from the UN meeting in New York, at which Russia vetoed the British-French request for council endorsement of their international control plan.

Strikers Arrested

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP)—Five more strikers were arrested this morning as 82 employees crowded their way through picket lines to go to work at the labor-troubled Canadian Bridge Company. During the last three days 25 pickets have been arrested and 20 charged.

RAISING A HAND FOR CAUTION at a sudden downtown intersection today was Const. Keith Hollett, doing point duty in wet weather garb. Traffic department reminds drivers minimum stopping distances increase with wet pavement. A motorist with good reactions and excellent brakes requires 80 feet to stop his car at town speed of 30 miles an hour. This is increased to 100 feet if brakes are only passable and longer on wet pavement.

Dewey Says Ban National Suicide; Ike Plans Reply

Compiled from Times News Services

The sharp controversy between the political parties in the United States over banning of H-bomb tests reached a new high today.

Arriving in Seattle overnight to continue his northwest campaigning, President Eisenhower instructed top administration officials to prepare a new reply to Democratic Adlai Stevenson's proposal that efforts be made to halt the tests.

He took this action despite a statement last Thursday he had uttered his "last word" on the Stevenson proposal.

His press secretary, James C. Hagerty, said in Seattle this morning Stevenson made "incorrect statements" in his speech on the subject Monday night and "we are going to set the record straight."

Meanwhile Tuesday night Republicans Thomas Dewey and Richard Nixon declared the Democrats are inviting the United States to "national suicide" with their proposals.

On the other side, Estes Kefauver, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, argued that the whole world is threatened by continued nuclear tests.

He quoted what he said was scientific opinion that the U.S. has H-bombs of "maximum concussive force to blow the earth off its axis by 16 degrees."

The campaigning by both parties hinged on a statement Monday night by Stevenson, that he would count it the first order of business, if elected, to work for an early halt to the tests.

President Eisenhower, while in Minnesota yesterday on the first leg of a campaign trip to the Pacific coast, took indirect note of Stevenson's proposal, saying his administration has sought persistently to dedicate the atom to mankind's welfare.

Dewey, former governor of New York and twice an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the presidency, in a speech at Flint, Mich., described the Monday night speech as a revised edition of Stevenson's opinion on "how to stop testing the H-bomb and still stay alive."

"He has changed it five times now and it still adds up to the same," Dewey added. "It is still an invitation to national disaster."

Vice-President Nixon said in a speech at Buffalo, N.Y., that Stevenson is "incredibly stubborn and naive" on the issue while Eisenhower offers what Nixon described as "experienced... hard-headed realism."

Kefauver, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, gave his views at a press conference in New York City. The Atomic Energy Commission declined to comment immediately on his "axis" statement.

But State Secretary Dulles told a Washington press conference he doubts Stevenson has enough facts to propose any sound plan.

Dulles said the whole problem has been under intensive study by the Eisenhower administration for several years.

Former AEC Member Backs Adlai

Stevenson's headquarters released a telegram from former atomic-energy commissioner Henry de Wolfe Smythe, who told Stevenson:

"Your clear and objective statement... is a service to the country transcending the partisanship of the current campaign."

Stevenson, elaborating on his proposal, first broached last April, said there would be little danger to national security in ending nuclear tests because, he said, the U.S. can quickly detect any tests by other powers and would be able to resume the U.S. test program within eight weeks.

At Minneapolis Tuesday President Eisenhower took an indirect swipe at Stevenson, saying that under his administration "we have advanced a long way" toward a lasting peace.

Eisenhower followed his usual custom of not mentioning his Democratic rival by name.

But after referring to "the anguished cry of some politicians" and to "anguished politicians," there could be little doubt that he was hitting at Stevenson when he asked:

"Can these politicians believe that Americans are blind to the strength and persistence of our efforts to dedicate the atom, not to the destruction, but to the constructive service of our civilization?"

$1 Judgment Against Sun In Libel Suit

VANCOUVER (CP)—Judgment of $1 was awarded Thomas L. Black, a log broker of New Westminster, in his libel action against The Sun Publishing Company Ltd. He sued for $447,000 damages.

The judgment was issued Tuesday by Mr. Justice J. V. Cline in the British Columbia Supreme Court.

Mr. Black claimed special damages for a statement published in The Sun, Oct. 28, 1955. He alleged that the newspaper had seriously harmed him in his reputation in credit.

A sum of $500 paid into court as "sufficient compensation" when his defence was filed was ordered returned to The Sun, which was also given costs against the plaintiff from the time the money was paid into court.

Residual Effects of Tally-Ho, Hens, Rabbits Worry Health Bd.

More restrictive regulations governing operation of tally-hos and keeping of poultry and rabbits in urban areas were recommended Tuesday by Victoria-Esquamalt Union Board of Health.

The board recommended that the city either undertake to sweep tally-ho routes three times a day, including Saturdays and Sundays, or require the tally-ho operators to be responsible for this service as a term of licensing.

At the same time, councils of Esquamalt and Victoria will be asked to amend present poultry by-laws to permit inspectors to clamp down on persons who keep chickens or rabbits in an unsatisfactory manner.

Sanitary inspector Elwood Gropp asked first for a total ban on keeping poultry or rabbits in the city but was opposed by Richard Reeve, school board representative on the board.

Mr. Gropp also suggested a $5 inspection fee. It was decided, however, to merely ask councils to enforce higher standards of cleanliness. Mr. Gropp is to bring in suggested regulations.

It was felt by some members that to keep chickens properly fed and housed at today's costs would make a small city poultry operation unprofitable.

The health board made it clear no objection was being taken to tally-hos despite earlier announcements that the board would discuss curtailment of the tourist attraction because of manure littering city streets.

Mr. Gropp said there have been many complaints about the manure on the street and said after the meeting that although health authorities opposed a total ban such action had been discussed.

Mollet Staking All On Suez Crisis Vote

PARIS (AP)—Premier Guy Mollet was authorized today to stake the life of his Socialist-led cabinet in a National Assembly debate on his Suez Canal policy and other vital issues. The decision to demand a vote of confidence was taken at a cabinet meeting presided over by President Rene Coty. Defeat would mean resignation of Mollet and his ministers. But this is not considered likely.

The debate began Tuesday with several broadsides against the Mollet government over the Suez issue. Before it adjourned for its summer recess, the assembly had given Mollet a carte blanche for firm action against Egypt's President Nasser for nationalizing the canal July 26.

ALGERIA DEBATE

Although the Mollet government has since pressed for international management of the waterway, these efforts so far have been fruitless.

Prime Minister Eden and Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd had a surprise conference with Mollet and Foreign Minister Pineau here Tuesday night. They wound up asking Egypt again to put forth a plan for operation of the canal that

HOLE IN SOLE

Nixon Sports Democratic Trade Mark

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UP)—Vice-President Richard Nixon, to his embarrassment, has developed a Stevenson-style hole in his left shoe.

Adlai Stevenson was photographed in 1952 with a hole in his sole. The picture was nationally printed and this year the Democrats made it a political trademark.

Nixon, who brought along only one pair of black shoes on this flying campaign trip, had phoned ahead for a new pair of his hard-to-buy size 11E shoes. But it was too late. A sharp-eyed photographer spotted the hole.

It was a little embarrassing, because the Republicans have countered the Democrat hole-in-the-shoe trademark by reprinting it on posters with the slogan: "Don't let this happen to you—vote Republican!"

Atlantic Plane Hunt Reduced

LONDON (Reuters)—United States Air Force Skymaster carried on a limited search today for a Liftmaster which disappeared into the Atlantic Ocean with 59 men aboard last Wednesday night.

But the general air search, covering 2,000,000 square miles of ocean, ended at midnight. Air force officers said it may have been the largest peace-time air search ever conducted over the Atlantic.

Airplanes from the United States, England, France and Portugal aided in the hunt.

The air force said today a small pillow with a plastic bag had been found in the Atlantic near the spot where the wheels and a dinghy had been picked up earlier.

Meanwhile, there was an indication that the plane may have been damaged by fire before it disappeared. Plane wheels found were charred, apparently by fire.

BELGRADE (Reuters)—Yugoslavia announced today that certain statements made by President Eisenhower on American aid for President Tito's government are "unacceptable."

At the same time, Yugoslavia revealed it has offered to purchase American agricultural surpluses under long-term credits repayable in dollars or corresponding currency instead of the present year-to-year aid system.

Tito's views were contained in a statement giving "first impressions" on Eisenhower's letter to Congress Monday which recommended continuing economic aid to Yugoslavia but holding back of heavy military supplies including 200 jet planes.

Divers to Hunt Doria Log-Books If Swedes, Italians Agree on Costs

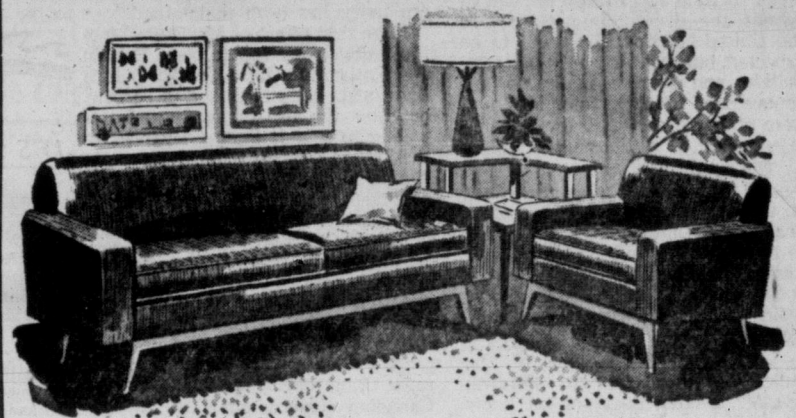

NEW YORK (AP)—A lawyer for the Italian Line has offered to send divers down to the sunken Andrea Doria to search for her log-books if the Swedish American Line will share the cost $50-55. But counsel for the Swedish American Line says it is up to the Italian Line to produce the books. The offer was made Tuesday at a pre-trial federal hearing into the July 25 collision between the Doria and the liner Stockholm. The collision cost 50 lives and sent the Doria to the bottom off Nantucket Island, Mass. Repeaters to amplify the signals are tied into the new trans-Atlantic telephone cable every 40 nautical miles.

The Secrets of Suez

HOWEVER THE SUEZ DISPUTE is finally settled, the complex, secret story behind it probably will not be known to the world public for a long time. Meanwhile a disturbing sidelight is revealed from Ottawa, by the dean of our political correspondents, Mr. Grant Dexter. This reliable reporter has discovered, through the Canadian Government, that Mr. Dulles has been playing a strange game with the United States' friends in Britain and Europe.

It will be recalled that a Western mission, headed by Prime Minister Menzies of Australia, went to Cairo a few weeks ago, discussed the Suez issue with Mr. Nasser and achieved no results. What the world public has never been told, until Mr. Dexter dug up the facts, is the sequel of the Cairo conference.

The Menzies mission having failed, Britain and France decided to submit the dispute immediately to the United Nations. This was to be expected, but for some curious reason Britain and France made no announcement of their intentions and were strongly attacked for refusing to seek United Nations intervention.

The secret fact revealed by Mr. Dexter is that Mr. Dulles intervened at that point and urged his allies to avoid the United Nations. Instead, he produced his doubtful scheme for a canal users' association. Reluctantly Britain and France accepted it to avoid a breach with the United States.

What were the motives of Mr. Dulles' devious strategy? Ottawa, says Mr. Dexter, does not yet know the answer to that question. "It is assumed," he writes, "that Mr. Dulles wished to keep a free hand. At the United Nations he almost certainly would have been confronted by a resolution he would have been compelled to support. Perhaps he was thinking of the presidential election and the danger of a war scare weakening the electoral appeal of the Republican Party."

At all events, after Britain and France had abandoned their appeal to the United Nations and embraced the canal users' project, they began, Mr. Dexter reports, to notice "a depressing duality in Mr. Dulles' statements. When he talked abroad, the proposed users' organization fairly bristled with teeth. When he talked at home he unfailingly explained that what he had said abroad did not mean anything. . . . In the end, the United Kingdom and France realized that they were the chief victims of Mr. Dulles' diplomacy. They ceased to rely on him and reverted to their original policy of going to the United Nations. No charges of bad faith have been publicly made and the semblance if not the reality of western unity has been maintained."

The first effect of Mr. Dulles' tortured diplomacy was to place Britain and France in a false position before the world. They appeared to be bent only on the use of force and unwilling to submit their grievances to the United Nations as they were obligated to do by the Charter. This misunderstanding damaged them among their friends, including the public of the United States.

But the more important and regrettable result is an undoubted cleavage between the Western allies, and a grave loss of confidence in Mr. Dulles among the governments and peoples of Britain and France. (The same thing, obviously, is true of the Canadian Government.)

Whatever the outcome of the present United Nations debate and the private conversations behind it may be, the Russians can chalk up another important political victory in their perpetual campaign to divide the West.

British Labor Moving Left

WHEN MR. ANEURIN BEVAN returned to high office in Britain's Labor Party through his election as treasurer this month, it was apparent that a strong element of Trades Union support had swung behind him.

Without backing from an important faction of the TUC Mr. Bevan would have remained in the political twilight. He was pushed into that relative obscurity by the trades unions when he made his bid against Mr. Hugh Gaitskell for party leadership on Clement Attlee's retirement. He presumably had the TUC preserved the character it then showed.

The re-emergence of Nye Bevan is one of two correlated developments in this year's Labor Party Congress. The other is the vigorous leftism of Mr. Frank Cousins, new leader of the Transport and General Workers Union.

That union was formerly a staunch right-wing element within the party. Under Mr. Cousins' leadership it appears to be backing a drive for more militant socialism. And that seems to be the present mood of the Labor Party—in sharp contrast to the moderation of recent years.

This is the attitude of Britain's socialists who look confidently ahead to restored prestige among the voters. They are politically optimistic because the Suez problem, difficulties in the automobile industry and current economic issues have brought the Conservative Government into deep trouble. Labor is closing its ranks, presumably with an eye on the next elections.

If there are those in the British Labor movement who look a little cynically to a future in which Nye Bevan will resume his efforts to seek party leadership, the majority seems inclined to turn left along the avenue he follows. This could, of course, be political expediency.

The trend is of particular interest in Canada in view of the CCF's Winnipeg gesture easing away from militant socialism. If the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation is the spiritual child of British Labor, it seems to have lost close touch with the feelings of the parent.

Not a Practicable Plan

THE QUESTION OF ROYAL RESIDENCE in Canada, raised anew in London dispatches, is not likely to stir wide interest in this country. Canadians will take second place to none in loyalty to the Throne and the institution of monarchy. But by historic national custom, and by individual nature, they are much less likely to view with eagerness the situation suggested by the removal of a royal court to Ottawa.

This reluctance, eminently respectful as it is, does not arise from any financial consideration, formidable though this might prove to be. It is rooted rather in the Canadian tradition which engendered almost unanimous approval of the abolition of titles in this country.

Canadians may not readily admit it, but few will claim that Ottawa is a large enough city to sustain a royal court. A Buckingham Palace on the banks of the Ottawa River would appear to be an enormously top-heavy structure for a community which has yet to achieve metropolitan stature.

The hard fact is that while the value of the monarchy wins increasing recognition in these troubled days, the machinery of the Throne would not prove adaptable to our North American environment. Three hundred years of striving toward our own peculiar form of loyal independence, three hundred years of struggle with what even now is largely a frontier economy and society, have served to preserve steadfastly the spirit of the monarchy, but equally have failed to fashion the setting for a royal residence.

The whole question, of course, is largely academic. The obstacles, both constitutional and practical, which would arise in the United Kingdom through such a step, would alone relegate the idea to the realm of supposition. But even before these could be felt, the feelings of the people of Britain, to say nothing of those of the principals involved, would doom any plan for "part-time monarchy" to oblivion.

How to Help the Symphony

THE INTERMUNICIPAL COMMITTEE has recommended a course to Greater Victoria municipalities which will enable them to make grants to the Victoria Symphony Society.

The committee suggests that Oak Bay, Esquimalt, Saanich and Central Saanich follow the procedure adopted by the city this year. The city included funds for a donation in its annual budget and then sought and received approval for the grant from the Provincial Government.

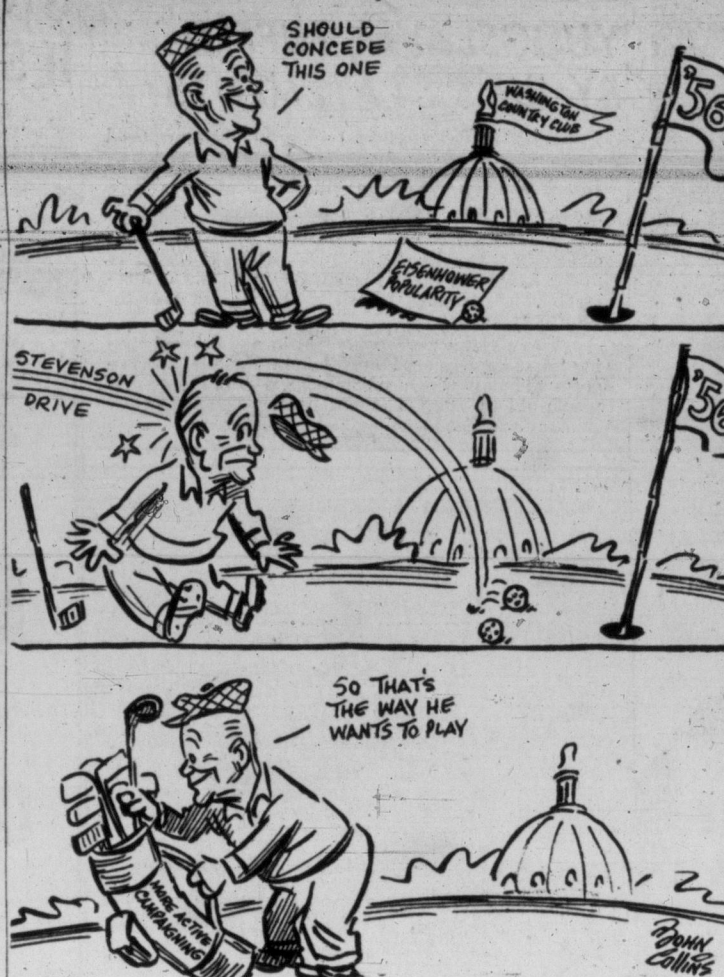

Oak Bay, professing support for the society, believed itself unable to make such a grant—although there appeared to be means by which a contribution could have been made.

The intermunicipal committee's proposal removes any impediment to assistance next year. If the municipalities honestly wish to assist the symphony—feeling that it is an organization of high value to the whole community—they can help.

Both the city and the committee have pointed the way. There should be no occasion in 1957 for expressions of regret over legal limitations which presumably prevent municipalities from making contributions.

IT'S JUST TOO TOO

The Mindoro Mind

TENACITY is a highly regarded human attribute. The never-say-die spirit, the bulldog determination to hang on, are widely admired, and rightly so. But for all its strength and burly nature, tenacity is a delicate attribute. For a while it is fine. But at some indefinable point it suddenly becomes stupid. And if still persisted in it rapidly becomes laughable. Like humor, which can drop dead with hardly a yawn of warning, the old bulldog quality can outlive its audience with bewildering speed.

Tobin

Thus, reading that news item yesterday about the Japanese on Mindoro Island, in the Philippines, you get a much different reaction from what might be expected.

The fact is that fifty Japanese soldiers, led by a captain, are still fighting the Second World War on Mindoro. They've been living in the jungle, killing birds and animals for food, and getting on as best they could for the last ten years. Now and then, I suppose, they saw the enemy in the distance but, lacking ammunition, they kept safely out of range.

Now that surely is a rousing example of loyalty to a cause, of service to the Emperor, of stalwart last-ditch soldiering. But for the life of me I can't raise any admiration for them.

At best I feel incredulity that a group of men could prove so stupid. At worst, they appear laughable clowns who have stayed on the stage too long.

One of the unfortunate results of trying too hard too long is that you may achieve the exact opposite of what you wanted to do. Those last-standing on Mindoro could conceivably create trouble for Japan by firing on Japan's present allies, instead of, as they think, defending their country.

Excessive Zeal

A sad example of this principle was the Catholic girl who was keeping company with a Presbyterian lad. The girl's parents gave their consent to marriage if the boy would become a Catholic. He agreed and began to take instruction in the faith.

Everything seemed to be going well, and the girl continued to encourage the lad. But a week before the wedding she came home in tears.

"What's the matter?" asked her mother.

"I can't help but feel that he would have fitted in pretty well with the boys on Mindoro."

"The wedding's all off," sobbed the girl.

"Whatever happened?" asked the mother.

"I tried too hard," sobbed the girl. "I over-sold him. Now he wants to be a priest."

But many a real instance is common. The after-dinner speaker who forgets the flight of time, the salesman who fights off his customer's efforts to close the deal because he wants to give his sales talk regardless of need, the guest who kills all hopes of a return bout because he gets a death grip on the easy chair—these folks all suffer from the Mindoro spirit.

Waiting Game

Sometimes, of course, it isn't the victim's fault. Mere force of circumstances may make you overly tenacious. You'll remember that little poem:

Under the spreading mistletoe the homely maiden stood,
And stood, and stood, and stood,
And stood, and stood, and stood . . .

The copy books used to tell the story of the little boy who was told by his father one morning to wait on London Bridge until he returned in a short while. The boy waited and waited, but the father didn't show up. Lunch time came and went. The boy stuck to his post, watching each passerby for the familiar face.

The afternoon passed—still no father. Night fell and the boy continued to wait. Finally around midnight the father turned up. He had become involved in his business affairs and had completely forgotten the boy.

The case was cited as an example of obedience and steadfastness and we were told to admire it. But I always had a hunch that the lad wasn't too bright.

His behaviour may have been okay back in the nineties, when this presumably occurred. But it seemed to me—and most of my classmates—that the lad might have shown a little more gumption and solved his problem other than by emulating a post.

I can't help but feel that he would have fitted in pretty well with the boys on Mindoro.

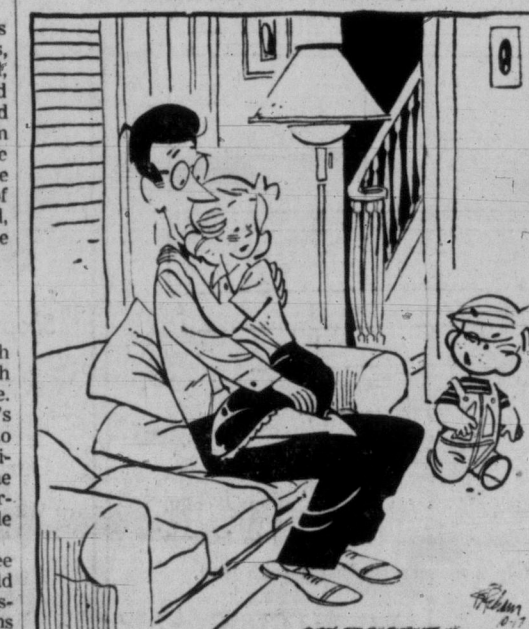

Now, one of the types most likely to stumble into the pitfall of not knowing when to quit is the columnist. So . . .

Price Hurdle to Study

Many students cannot afford to buy American textbooks at their present price, inflated by stupid taxes. As a result, this valuable supplement to higher grade teaching cannot be fully used.

A bookshop assistant confessed that she was ashamed to ask the high prices for medical and engineering textbooks. "The B.C. Government can at once remove the sales tax on all books and subsidize the price of textbooks by taxing the sale of TV sets."

Receipts for purchase of textbooks by students would be cashed in, or the books could be income-tax deductible.

Delinquency

Did our adult delinquents invent the term juvenile delinquent to make teenagers responsible for almost all the "anti-social" crimes of modern-day society?

We have recently seen newspapers fill front pages with accounts of teenage vandalism, thefts, acts of violence, and so on. Is this to enable the newspapers' adult delinquents to thrill with sadistic delight, when they see pictures showing juvenile delinquents being led off to prison "to complete their delinquent education?"

And yet, after a while, the juvenile delinquents must return—too often educated in every aspect of "adult" crime. "Adult" not "juvenile" delinquency is our main problem.

Youth and Church

We have had Mr. Rees' expression of regret at "an appalling lack of interest in the church on the part of young people today," and we have had at least two letters hailing such a state of affairs as a proof that our young people have shaken off the shackles of superstition, enlightened of course by modern scientific knowledge.

I would like, if I may, to make a few comments.

In the first place I am inclined to think that Mr. Rees is unduly pessimistic and the charge not altogether deserved. Also that, insofar as it is deserved, the cause is certainly not due "The enlightenment of scientific knowledge" but to several other and quite different things.

In Victorian days children went to church because they were taken there and adolescents continued to go largely because it was very difficult to get out of doing so and because there were no "movies" or television or cars to take them elsewhere or provide them with other occupations. Moreover—and this is perhaps the main reason—in those days there was such a thing as parental authority and neither children nor adolescents were completely free to do exactly what they liked and go where they liked at all times as they certainly are today.

It might possibly be admitted that the old conditions were not altogether satisfactory but it is surely quite obvious that the new regime leaves much to be desired.

'He Could've Did More'

PHILADELPHIA'S Thirty-Second Ward—one of those Negro sections in the northern big cities which both Democrats and Republicans are now watching with breathless attention—is nowhere as bad as the worst of Harlem and nowhere as good as the best.

In this Philadelphia ward there is little to compare with wide areas of slum clearance housing that promise a new decency and hope to the poor in Harlem. There is nothing, either, quite so evil as Harlem's even wider areas of stinking cliff-high slum apartments that are fully as horrible as the worst slums of Bombay. The Thirty-Second Ward is, rather, a classical Negro section in the old style, where the Negroes have taken over street after drab and dreary street built for fairly prosperous white people 70 or 80 years ago.

The more ambitious and successful Negro families live in—often even own—little stone-built row houses that must once have housed a solid middle class family apiece, and today house anywhere up to eight or ten Negro families apiece.

Push your way into these tenements and sidewalks because they have nowhere else to play. Climb the rickety dark stairs. As you pass by, avert your eyes, if you are wise, from the single foul bathroom that serves the two or three families on each floor.

Knock at the crazy doors. Peer into the crowded rooms, furnished with the squalid castoffs of our industrial civilization, whose products, somehow, do not seem to age very gracefully.

You are gripped—you must be gripped—by a deep shame that this rich country lets so many of its citizens live in such a manner. Even so, even the worse of Philadelphia's Thirty-Second Ward lacks the dark, downright Asian squalor, the foulness and grim hopelessness of the worst of Harlem.

And this difference seems to have considerable political importance, judging by the results of an intensive door-to-door inquiry recently conducted in company with a professional pollster, John Kraft.

On a similar expedition in Harlem, this reporter's partner found that the slum dwellers thought little about civil rights and were voting solidly Democratic simply because "The Democrats are the party of us poor people." In contrast, he also found a passionate preoccupation with civil rights wherever Negro families had achieved more decent living conditions; and in these sections of Harlem there was considerable resentment of Adlai E. Stevenson's "moderation" on the civil rights issue.

In Philadelphia's Thirty-Second Ward,

there is here, as there is no doubt in all other places a select circle of people who lose no opportunity to attack "the churches" and religion generally. Personally I would think that public opinion in general is sufficiently healthy, to make it safe and wise to disregard them entirely.

Spelling Economy

The mounting cost of education is a serious problem facing boards of education everywhere. How can these costs be met without breaking the taxpayers' back?

No community can afford to leave its children without an education. However, our communities are faced with the dilemma of the necessary education against the mounting costs of education. We cannot afford to have our school teachers underpaid and unprepared to teach our children.

Properly paid and properly trained teachers will have the inspiration to exert every effort and to explore every avenue to help them educate our children in the shortest possible time. The teachers alone cannot solve this problem. The solution is a matter of co-operation of the general public, the teachers and the educational authorities.

Let members of the community who may have ideas, which might be helpful in the solution of this problem, come forth with the ideas so that the public might discuss them. I am sure, our daily newspapers will be ready to help with such public discussions.

There is one avenue which, if explored, promises to be of help in reducing the costs of education and in holding them at an even keel. This avenue is the adoption of simplified spelling or phonetic spelling.

In Remembrance

Only those who worked and trained with Miss Hilda Leighton during the past years of Guiding in Victoria, realize just what she gave to this movement, and to the children of this city, many of them now with Guides of their own.

Receiving her own early training in one of the first Guide companies in England, Miss Leighton devoted most of her life to this movement until her recent retirement, taking Guides to camp year after year, and in later years running the Victoria division.

As one who was privileged with many others to serve as Guide and Commissioner under her, I remember with thankfulness her thorough training and discipline which made Guiding.

It seemed fitting that at the service on Tuesday, the church of St. Mary's, Oak Bay, was decorated for the Harvest Festival, and one's thoughts went to the harvest of Guides in this city and district through the efforts of Miss Leighton.

As her brother, the Rev. John, who took part in the service remarked, just before the Guiders sang "Tune," "The day is done, but a new day is begun."

In affectionate remembrance from us all.

Push your way into these tenements and sidewalks because they have nowhere else to play. Climb the rickety dark stairs. As you pass by, avert your eyes, if you are wise, from the single foul bathroom that serves the two or three families on each floor.

Knock at the crazy doors. Peer into the crowded rooms, furnished with the squalid castoffs of our industrial civilization, whose products, somehow, do not seem to age very gracefully.

You are gripped—you must be gripped—by a deep shame that this rich country lets so many of its citizens live in such a manner. Even so, even the worse of Philadelphia's Thirty-Second Ward lacks the dark, downright Asian squalor, the foulness and grim hopelessness of the worst of Harlem.

And this difference seems to have considerable political importance, judging by the results of an intensive door-to-door inquiry recently conducted in company with a professional pollster, John Kraft.

On a similar expedition in Harlem, this reporter's partner found that the slum dwellers thought little about civil rights and were voting solidly Democratic simply because "The Democrats are the party of us poor people." In contrast, he also found a passionate preoccupation with civil rights wherever Negro families had achieved more decent living conditions; and in these sections of Harlem there was considerable resentment of Adlai E. Stevenson's "moderation" on the civil rights issue.

In Philadelphia's Thirty-Second Ward,

in contrast, where almost no one can escape from slum conditions but the slums are somewhat less appalling, the economic and civil rights issues are blended in almost everyone's mind. But here in Philadelphia, they seldom mention Adlai Stevenson's "moderation" on the civil rights, instead, they say, "The President could've did more to help our people."

Typical of the more articulate was Mrs. Irene Bennett, a sturdy intelligent woman who works for Wanamakers and is rearing her large brood in part of one floor of a tumbledown house on Camac Street.

Mrs. Bennett is no Stevenson enthusiast, but after careful thought she gives the greatest weight to the President's inaction during the school troubles in the South.

"The deciding factor with me is which party is going to do the most for my people," she says.

More Belligerent

More belligerent, and more representative of the less thoughtful, more directly emotional voters was Miss Celia Cook, a little, white-haired, hard-working old lady who lives in a room like a cave in one of the North 12th St. slums.

"I don't like Republicans," said Miss Cook. "They're for the rich. And I don't like Mr. Eisenhower at all, either. He's done everything for the white people and nothing for the colored people. Why look at all those troubles down South. Isn't the President? Why can't he do something?"

Howard Norris, an ambitious young clerical worker who is buying his own little house on North St., took the exceptional view that "Although Eisenhower has ducked the civil rights issue, I always remember these southern governors are Democrats. So I'm for the Democrats just because I think they're the party of the little man."

But two of the rare Republican voters—ladies of rather obvious easy virtue, said they did not like the President because "It seems like he could've did a lot more for the colored people."

Certainly Erroneous

They then added, with a giggle, that they were Republicans all the same, "Because everyone round here is a Republican."

That notion of the two ladies was certainly erroneous. The vast majority of the voters of the Thirty-Second Ward chose Adlai Stevenson four years ago. The Democratic lead was so decisive that there were few Republicans left to switch; yet we found a couple of switches none-the-less.

Unless our rather large sample was somehow badly distorted, this crucial Negro ward of crucial Philadelphia should give Adlai Stevenson as large a proportional majority as he got four years ago. And if our switches are indicative, he may even gain a percentage point or two on top of that.

Billy Bunter Revived

LONDON—Billy Bunter is a voice out of the past for anyone who had his youth a generation ago in England or the English-type Dominions such as Australia and New Zealand. He was the typical fat boy of an English public school and with his pals, Harry Wharton, Bob Cherry, Frank Nugent and Hurree Singh, he featured in boys' stories about Greyfriars School.

I think Billy Bunter's class was the Upper Sixth at Greyfriars because I seem to remember some joke of my youth about his being in the Double Sixth at St. Dominos.

Having had his hour of glory in the 1920s, he dropped out of the limelight before the war, when boys turned to other heroes. Now of a sudden I hear young Mac and his friends full of talk about Billy Bunter and Co., using again those old Bunter phrases—"I say, you rotters!", "Leggo, you chumps!"

Reason he has taken a new lease of life is that he has been embraced by television and there's a series of his escapades every Sunday night.

I thought at first that some bright young television script writer had had the idea of reviving Billy Bunter for a new generation. But not at all. I learned these scripts were written by Frank Richards, the man who invented Bunter and his crew half a century ago!

Richards sold his first Bunter story

in 1906. Eighty years of age now, he is still a bachelor and looks upon Bunter and the other boys of Greyfriars as his family.

"They are more real to me than real people," he says. "I'm no longer an old man when I start to write. Sometimes on a winter's day when my thoughts are with the boys of Greyfriars out in the blazing sun on the cricket field, I look up and see snow falling outside, and it gives me quite a shock."

Fortunate man, Frank Richards, and a rarity. So often a person achieves fame in some field of endeavor in his younger days, as Richards did with his creation of Bunter, and then in later life he winds up forgotten and penniless or coasting through the remainder of his life harking back to the days when he was something big. But here's Frank Richards, at 80, back among the Big Names again. He must feel life has been very kind to him.

Kennels where you can park your dog when you are away on holiday are one thing, but here's something new. Fellow named Edgar Ford, of London's Swiss Cottage district, started this summer a holiday home for indoor plants. You park your geranium or creeping ivy, or whatever it happens to be, with Ford and for the equivalent of 25 cents a week he'll treat it with loving care while you're away.

Six hundred holiday-goers took advantage of this service during the past summer and already 50 plant owners have made bookings for when they're away over Christmas.

YOUR HEALTH

By DR. WALTER C. ALVAREZ

Better Choice of Parents

Dr. Walter C. Alvarez is Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic and Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation.

Many thoughtful persons ask if there shouldn't be a law against the bearing of children by persons who carry some hereditary disease, which is likely to appear in one or two out of every four of the children they may bring into the world. Often these children have to suffer terribly all their days. Many of them have to be brought up and supported by the community.

An answer to these questions was given recently by Dr. B. Glass, in the Johns Hopkins Hospital magazine. As he said, there is no question that states would be justified in saying that certain persons, such as feeble-minded girls, should not be allowed to run around bearing one illegitimate child after another, usually sired by some good-for-nothing man. Such feeble-minded girls can easily be sterilized without any harm to them.

Anyone who would like to know what large sums the care of the descendants of just one such woman can cost should read two books, one by Dugdale and one by Esterbrook, telling about the Jukes, a family of degenerates living in New York State. A large percentage of the members of this family have been petty thieves, vagrants, alcoholic bums, and prostitutes.

The great objection to any eugenic plan is that the brothers and sisters of a feeble-minded girl can carry and transmit the mental defect just as well as the girl can, and they are not likely to consent to sterilization unless they are trained, in science or in the breeding of fine animals.

MANY WOULD CHOOSE RIGHT

It would, of course, be wonderful if all persons who are carriers of some serious mental or nervous or muscular disease could know the tremendous danger that will come to some of the children they may have. Doubtless then, many of these persons would choose not to have any children.

I see many women who say, "I would never have a child, because I would not run the risk of condemning someone to suffer as terribly as I and some of my brothers and sisters have suffered."

Dr. Alvarez

To show how dangerous it is for two persons with a similar poor inheritance to marry, a friend of mine, whose uncle was an epileptic, married a lovely woman whose aunt was an epileptic. Both of these parents, and all four of the grandparents were fine, able and sensible persons, but apparently my friend and perhaps his wife were carriers of nervous disease.

One of the next great problems in medicine that we humans must tackle is the problem of apparently normal carriers of disease. Let two of them marry and almost all of their children can suffer terribly. A point that I have to make to all people with serious nervous disease who ask me about marrying, is that no genetics counselor will tell them not to have children. All a counselor does is to tell the people what the chances are that they will have defective children. Then, if they want to go ahead and take the risk, that is their decision. I wish to emphasize this point so that a number of people will not write me angrily to say that I had no right to forbid them to marry. I never in my life forbade anyone to marry.

HEPATITIS

Dozens of people want to know what to do for hepatitis. Usually, by the time they know they have it, the inflammation is over with and all that is left is some scarring of the liver.

Hepatitis was a common disease of soldiers during the war. It was due to either one of two viruses. The one of ordinary epidemic jaundice generally produces a mild form of the disease which does not need any treatment, and is not followed by serious results. In some cases the other virus produces severe damage to the liver, and then the end-result may be what is called cirrhosis or hardening or fibrosis of the liver.

Since the Second World War, the medical literature has been full of articles on hepatitis and I have read dozens of them. The impression I get is that there is no good drug treatment for the disease, and no special diet worth trying. Some time ago U.S. army physicians who had treated hundreds of these cases wrote that the best diet was a good full nutritious one, such as will maintain the soldier's nutrition at a high level.

If I had a severe form of hepatitis about all I would know to do would be to pray that I would be left enough good liver tissue so that I could live on in comfort for the rest of my days.

University Aid From Business Urged on CCC

QUEBEC (CP)—Businessmen and prosperous people in general should be willing to put up money to support their freedom, Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, president of Acadia University, Wolfville, N.S., said today in an address to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Universities are in grave financial difficulties, he said, and if the survival of these centres of intellectual freedom were really of importance, why should not businessmen come to the rescue of university budgets?

If every firm in Canada would contribute one per cent of its gross profit each year to a fund for Canadian universities, the benefit would be incalculable.

Capt. Joseph Jeffrey of London, Ont. president of London Life Insurance Company, a member of the panel, said there can be little question that considerably more inflation is in store, and an economist had estimated that by the year 2,000—only 44 years from now—the Canadian dollar might be worth between 12 and 14 cents.

HOME GARDEN

By HILDA BEASTALL

Plants in Flower Successfully Moved

In the process of planting the foundation of a satisfying spring garden, we quite often are confronted with plants which must be moved though still in bloom.

Some years we have a few degrees of frost in early October. This blackens the foliage of tender plants such as the dahlia and begonia, and hastens the maturing process carried on in the tubers of these plants.

This year, they are still blooming. If the spring garden is to be set where these are growing, they can be moved and allowed to mature in another location.

The best procedure to follow with the dahlias is to remove all the flowers and buds first, allowing the leaves to remain. Dig the plants with plenty of soil attached to the roots, and replant closely together in a spare piece of ground. While this is not so ideal as leaving them without disturbance until frost, it is one way of surmounting a problem without sacrificing entirely the effect of the natural maturing process.

With the tuberous begonias, a temporary planting place need not be found. Instead, after digging the tubers with earth attached to roots, pack closely together in a box or corner of a cold frame.

Canna roots may be lifted, and replanted into large pots to finish maturing under cover. After the foliage has yellowed and died down, the tubers may be wintered in the almost dry soil of the pot in a place free from frost.

The maturing process of gladioli should not be hurried. They are better left undisturbed at least until the foliage shows signs of yellowing. Since the soil is likely to be quite wet by the time this yellowing is evident it will be essential to dig the corms quickly after digging. Otherwise many will be lost, for rot sets in rapidly in wet, slowly dried corms.

HITLER HAD DATA IN WEEK

Nazi Spy Snaffled FDR-Churchill Note

LONDON (Reuters)—German spies delivered into Hitler's hands details of a top-secret personal message from President Roosevelt to Winston Churchill within a week of its receipt in London.

The message, say captured German foreign ministry documents published here Tuesday, concerned the handing over to Britain of 50 used American destroyers, the supplying of U.S. anti-aircraft guns and ammunition, and steel deliveries.

U.S. Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy delivered the message to Prime Minister Churchill May 16, 1940—19 months before the United States entered the Second World War.

One of the main points made by Roosevelt, say the documents, was that the American fleet at that time was "concentrated at H. all, where it must in any case remain for the moment."

The documents published cover the period from March 18 to June 22, 1940. Seven volumes already have been published in accord with a 1946 Anglo-American agreement.

The German correspondence published yesterday reports on plans for sabotage in the United States, planting of agents within the government in Washington, refusal of the American press to be "bought," and many other details of the Nazi campaign in America.

Hans Thomsen, German charge d'affaires in Washington, reported to Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop in April, 1940, that valuable information had been obtained from "a reliable and tried confidential agent who is very friendly with the director of the code room of the state department."

Weathermen Forced to Rely On Their Corns

OTTAWA (CP)—Meteorologists aboard the navy's patrol ship Labrador were reduced to the "aching corn" method of weather forecasting during an Arctic radio blackout that lasted for several days.

During the September blackout—caused by sunspots—all contact was cut off between the outside world and the patrol ship engaged in a survey of Arctic waters in support of DEW (Distant Early Warning) radar line operations.

Without the usual weather reports radioed from a large surrounding area, it was impossible to produce the weather forecasts needed for safe and efficient operations in the Arctic.

Hence, navy headquarters reported, the Labrador's crew had no warning of the season's first snowstorm that stranded a helicopter and a boat overnight on a beach. They were also surprised by a sudden weather change that brought fast-rising seas and forced two sounding boats to scuttle back to the mother ship from a channel they were surveying.

Radio operators aboard the supply ship, waiting for the airwaves to clear, eyed a mounting pile of outgoing messages that could not be sent. Similar stacks of messages, destined for the Labrador, accumulated in other ships in the area and at the naval radio station at Churchill, Man.

THE EMPTY ROOM

A 3-bedroom home... with TV in the den.

That's our joint... would say Real Estate men; But they never say what the "barn" is like. When off to College, your daughter does hike. And there's an empty room off the hall. It's enough to make a fellow bawl. I steal in a glance once in awhile. And try to put on a brave sort of smile. As I gather courage & walk inside.

And sort of pick things up, while misty-eyed. I run my hand and take a long look. At her vanity we built in the little nook. With the boudoir lamps she used to love. And such fun we placed above the mirror we placed above the film I erase. As I toy with some junk in her jewelry case. Then I sit on the bed, my eyes all a-swimmin'. And thumb thru a book called "Little Women". Then I blur at the carpet, shake my dome. She was SO thrilled, when I first brought it home. "With my curtains Daddy... it goes so well. My Pops kind a special... and rather swell." I yanked up the window, tho I'd jump out. So sprawled on the bed, and cried my eyes out. So if YOU'RE all together... have a big ball. 'Cause there's a big hollow room... OFF THE UP STAIRS HALL.

B.C. CONTRACTORS BIDDING 25-60% TOO HIGH—BRIGGS

VANCOUVER (CP)—British Columbia contractors, overloaded with work commitments, are submitting contract bids "25 to 60 per cent higher than one should be able to expect," a British Columbia Power Commission official said here Tuesday.

H. L. Briggs, general manager of the commission, said inflation was seriously hampering the government utility.

Contractors were putting in bids which avoided "any financial risk whatsoever," Mr. Briggs told Vancouver Rotary Club.

A spokesman for the construction industry denied Mr. Briggs' contention in an interview.

SUPERBLY CHOSEN PROGRAM FOR SMALL AUDIENCE

Cassenti Players 'Inspired', Promising Future Predicted

By AUDREY ST.D. JOHNSON

For those mostly familiar with and devoted to the music of symphony orchestras and the string ensemble, Tuesday night's recital by the Cassenti Players of Vancouver, must have been something of a revelation.

The woodwind choir—with French horn—is much less seldom heard in chamber concert than it deserves. But with the well co-ordinated and musicianly performance of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra first desk players, a small Victoria Musical Art audience in the Empress Hotel, heard clearly and explicitly, the range, character and texture of the woodwinds.

George Zukerman, bassoonist and founder of the Cassenti Players, provided commentary on the rather long but superbly chosen program. His easy, informal style accentuated the intimate nature of the performance.

Oboe, clarinet and bassoon are descendants of one of the oldest families of instruments and are recognized by composers as being the perfect combination for the performance of such antiquaries of form as the gavotte, the passacaglia and early rondo. This was noticeable in the Sonata for Oboe and Bassoon by the 18th century Nannan, and the Divertimento for oboe, clarinet and bassoon by Mozart.

PLEASINGLY BLENDED

Yet it was interesting to discover that contemporary harmonies are more subtly and pleasingly blended by these instruments, and become more evocative of mood than when played by other groups.

A quintet by Guillaume Balay in the 18th century style, Cinq Pieces en Trio by Ibert and Night Legend for Quintet by Ropartz created some of the more delightful listening of the evening.

The consistent and highly competent playing of this ensemble of five expert instrumentalists at intervals reached a level of inspired performance which was a brilliant indication of what the future holds if the group remains intact.

The technical virtuosity is there, the musicianship and sensitivity to the demands of both composer and instrument.

B.C. Birthday Crest Protected By Law

The official symbol of the B.C. Centennial Committee has been released to all B.C. newspapers and local centennial groups for use during 1958.

The crest, bearing the dates 1858 and 1958, will be carried on all of the committee's official documents. It is protected by law and may only be used with the committee's permission.

"Purpose of the crest goes deeper than mere advertisement," executive secretary Larry McCance said today. "Counterfeit activities have shown up in every type of anniversary celebration with which I have been associated."

PROTECTION

"The crest will protect merchants from buying advertising in souvenir publications which are in no way connected with official planning for British Columbia's 100th birthday."

Designer of the crest is Cyril Connorton, artist foreman at the Queen's Printer. Of it he says:

"The trees are our heritage. The water is symbolic of the sea coast and our mountains are shown, too. The initials B.C. are on top, and the dates of our first 100 years are shown prominently."

"All these surround the provincial emblem of the crown and Union Jack above a glowing sun."

Mr. Connorton, who has been in the lithographic department at the Queen's Printer for 11 years, made a number of trial sketches before arriving at the design chosen by the committee.

Montreal Policemen May Switch to Jeeps

MONTREAL (CP)—City motorcycle police here may switch to touring their beats in jeeps or small sports cars.

Civic executive committee members and police officials Tuesday saw a demonstration by jeeps and a sports car.

Pierre DesMairais, chairman of the executive committee, said if the city could obtain a better vehicle than the motorcycle it would consider buying it. The change is being contemplated to provide traffic police with maximum comfort, he added.

He has painted British Columbia scenery on hundreds of travel folders and is responsible for the illuminations on scrolls bearing welcome addresses for visiting royalty.

AROUND AND ABOUT

With Jo Healy

I'm afraid it isn't so much that I have a flexible mind as that I'm a weak sister—almost anybody's argument can sway me from what I consider my very firm opinion; and, in a verbal duel, a battle of wits, some contradictory thing I say or do invariably places me in a losing position.

Off to the local store the other day and made a couple of customary complaints in a kidding way, the kind that are accepted, by the men-behind-the-counters, in the spirit with which they are delivered. They know I'm kidding, as I've been doing here for more than 20 years, about the grocery situation. The friendly jeering is obvious as such, by reason of the fact that, in spite of occasional forays on outside super markets, the comparison is shaded, favorably as to prices, variety and condition of merchandise (and accessibility) on the local side, and almost all of my extensive grocery purchases are made here.

This particular morning I passed the snide remark that at least the super markets packaged potatoes in a clean puffed bag so that a loyal customer—emphasis on the loyal—didn't have to soil her hands tumbler the dusty things into a brown paper sack. I never win. "Did I ever," was shot at me, "open a puffed bag of spuds and find that the top few, and a necessary camouflage down the sides, were flawless and uniform in size, only to discover that packed in the middle were very small potatoes indeed?" I had, I said, hastily backing down.

Canadian Variety Pure at Heart

"Would I," was demanded, "prefer dusty Canadian potatoes that were true inside, or the clean-washed American ones, riddled with black rot, the kind we had last week?" Canadian, I meekly admitted, and submitted, sweetly, the retort that the superfluity of super markets with their glamor and their come-on

Russ Lumbermen Arrive Thursday

Eight-Man Delegation to Spend Three Days In Examination of Island Activities

An eight-man delegation of Russian lumbermen now touring Canada will spend Thursday night, Friday and most of Saturday on Vancouver Island to examine government and industrial activities.

Led by G. M. Orlov, minister of forest industries in U.S.S.R., the group will reach Vancouver Thursday morning, and Thursday evening will arrive in Nanaimo to spend the night at the Tideview Motel.

At 8 a.m. Friday, accompanied by 18 B.C. and Canadian trade associations' representatives, the visitors will leave by bus for Ladysmith to inspect the Comox Logging & Railway Co. log dump and booming ground.

At 9.30 they will leave for Mesachie Lake, where they will tour the Hillcrest Lumber Co. Ltd. sawmill. Their host on the tour and for luncheon in the cookhouse and afternoon visit to Hillcrest logging operations will be Hector Stone, company president.

Mr. Stone and Angus McBean, MacMillan and Bloedel Ltd. chief forester who also is traveling with the party, were two of the Canadian lumbermen who recently returned from an extensive tour of Russia's forest industries.

The Hillcrest tour is scheduled to end at 4 p.m., when the party will leave for Victoria. A reception will be held at the Empress Hotel Duke of Kent room, to be followed by a provincial government dinner at 7.30 p.m.

The party will leave here Saturday at 8 a.m. for Cowichan Lake and a trip through the B.C. Forest Service experimental station. Luncheon will be served at Yellow Point Lodge, and from 2.15 to 3.45 p.m. the party will be taken through the Harmac pulp mill. It will return to Vancouver Saturday evening.

Votes Totalling $2.5 Million Facing Nanaimo

NANAIMO (CP) — Nanaimo voters "sometime in the future" will have an opportunity to fix priorities for approximately $2,500,000 in money by-laws covering needed civic services, Ald. Haig Burns said Tuesday.

Alderman Burns spoke to the Kiwanis Club chiefly on the subject of a proposed $500,000 civic centre to include a variety of recreation provisions as well as an indoor swimming pool.

He said that Nanaimo also badly needs an $86,000 library building, $300,000 to complete a street paving program, $150,000 for a new fire hall, $150,000 for the Vancouver Island Exhibition Association, and $150,000 for a new civic yard.

In addition funds are needed to bring secondary playing fields throughout the city up to standard.

Nanaimo's 1956 budget is approximately $1,200,000.

CANADA HURT BY SAVAGERY SAYS CAMERON

NANAIMO—Canada has a reputation as a "savage" nation because of the severity of sentences handed down in its courts, Colin Cameron, MP, told the Local Council of Women here.

"The sentences we give are much more severe than any meted out in any other nation in the Western world," he said. "Are we trying to rehabilitate these people or are we trying to 'get even' with them?" he asked.

Prison officials believe that a prisoner begins to deteriorate after five years, he said, and after that time is likely to leave jail worse than when he went in.

A. J. Proudfoot Heads Colwood Ratepayers

Arthur J. Proudfoot was elected Monday night president of the newly-formed Colwood Ratepayers' Association, to serve the Colwood-Metchosin area.

Willard Dawson is vice-president and Edward Botting, secretary-treasurer. Directors are A. Peatt, R. Wishart, R. Ridley and E. Newton.

Although formation of the association closely follows talk of establishing a municipality in the area, the group has taken no stand on the issue.

"It is an example, though, of the kind of questions arising in the area," Mr. Proudfoot said. "A ratepayers' association is needed to handle them."

A constitution will be drafted and presented to members for adoption at an early meeting.

Honors will go to the pioneer with the longest residence in the valley and to the oldest pioneers present at the reunion.

Knife-Waving Thief Robs 10-Year-Old

LADYSMITH (CP) — A 10-year-old newspaper carrier boy was held at knife-point by a hoodlum here early Tuesday evening and told to hand over his newspaper collections amounting to $20.

Peter Dabb was making his monthly collection when the hoodlum overtook him and robbed him of the money. RCMP are investigating.

Adenauer Fires Four Top Aides

Slowdown in Rearmament May Follow Switch in West German Cabinet

BONN, Germany. (AP).—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer fired Defence Minister Theodor Blank and three other ministers Tuesday in a cabinet reshuffle that could lead to a slowdown in West German rearmament.

He replaced Blank with Atomic Affairs Minister Franz Josef Strauss, who favors less speed and more quality in building the new armed forces with which the Bonn republic will bolster NATO defenses.

The big surprise was that Adenauer did not name Foreign Minister Heinrich von Brentano, 52, to the additional post of vice-chancellor. Many of the chancellor's Christian Democratic supporters have been urging that Adenauer designate his successor now to avoid a party-weakening struggle for power when he leaves the political scene.

Adenauer pledged, in a radio address explaining the cabinet changes, that West Germany will fulfill her military commitments to the North Atlantic alliance.

But Strauss, 41, has publicly assailed Blank's rush to rearm. He is said to have told Adenauer West Germany should go slow in rearmament until the United States and Britain "clarify their military thinking."

Adenauer conceded that he is "greatly concerned" over public opposition to rearmament. He reminded German youths that young men in other nations also do not like to give up their careers for military training.

CHARGED—Mrs. Sonje Juznic, 26, wife of Yugoslavian vice-consul Stanislaus Juznic, photographed in San Francisco police court, where her arraignment on a charge of shoplifting was continued for a week. Mrs. Juznic was arrested by a department store detective who charged the things in her large shopping bag were not paid for. Her husband labeled the charge "preposterous." (NEA).

West Germany Approves Russian

BONN (Reuters).—The West German government has agreed to the appointment of Andrei Gromyko, previously Soviet ambassador to Austria, as Russia's new ambassador here, the foreign office announced Tuesday. Smirnov, 47, succeeds Valerian Zorin who was recalled last July and reappointed a deputy foreign minister.

United Church Names Moderator for Alberta

EDMONTON (CP).—Rev. W. Oliver Nugent is the new moderator of the Alberta Synod of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. He was elected Tuesday at the annual meeting for a one-year term, succeeding Rev. Gordon A. Peddie of Banff.

HELPS OVERCOME CONSTIPATION

Maybe you aren't getting at the cause of your constipation. Good-tasting Kellogg's All-Bran gets directly at a common cause of constipation: lack of good food bulk in the diet. Laxatives that do not contain bulk cannot correct this condition. All-Bran, made of whole wheat grain, provides all the bulk (gentle roughage) you need daily for regularity. Kellogg's—the original, ready-to-eat bran cereal. Enjoy comfortable, natural regularity within 10 days or return the empty carton and get twice what you paid.

PANTS—DON'T WEAR 'EM; SUIT—NEVER OWNED ONE

VERNON (CP).—"I have never worn a pair of trousers in my life, nor ever owned a suit of clothes," said Hugh McPherson of Edinburgh, Scotland, head of a manufacturing firm of kilts and bagpipes. President of the Scottish Pipe Band Association of 200 bands, Mr. McPherson leaves today for Vancouver to visit the Seaforth Highlanders of Canada, for which he makes uniforms.

WHAT'S THE SCORE?

BY Denny Boyd

The grand wizens of the Canadian Rugby Union have put the official kibosh on the use of radio communications between coaches and players. Thus, we will be spared this scene.

Coach Clem Crane sucked reflectively on a throat lozenge as he faced a battery of quarterbacks. "Remember now, fellers," he said, idly fingering an old condenser, "do it just like we did in rehearsal this afternoon. Listen right into the microphone, don't miss your cues and, above all, make sure your ears are clean. We don't want any messages missed."

"Right, Chief," parroted the quarterbacks in unison. "We read you loud and clear, Over."

"Now this is gonna be a tough game, fellers," said Coach Crane. "I ain't gonna ask you just to win for me, but I sure could use a win about now," he said, turning slightly so they could see the threadbare seat of his britches.

"You gotta give this one the old college communicate. I want you to get out there and communicate, communicate, communicate. Always remember, a team that won't be monitored can't be monitored. Think of the words of Knute Rockne, 'Give me a strong line and a good announcer and I'll beat the world.'"

His voice rose to a crescendo, punctuated only by the vacillating oscillations of audio-frequency rising from the portable transmitter hard by.

Dramatically, Coach Crane switched to a lower pitch, the better to preserve the tubes.

"Okay, men. Plug in and get out there. And when you hit that off-on switch, hit it hard."

"Right, Chief," parroted the quarterbacks.

With only a second's pause to check their program listings and the antennas rising spire-like atop their helmets, they disappeared out of the control-room door and thundered onto the field.

Sitting gnome-like at the end of the bench, completely surrounded by cables that curled serpent-like hither and yon, Coach Crane allowed himself time to frown.

It was only the second quarter and already his team was in trouble.

Quarterback Yablonski had damaged his receiver, necessitating an emergency service call to a radio shop. To balance the cost, Coach Crane had been forced to cut two imports.

Quarterback Tiggles complained he could not hear Coach Crane's messages and that he could only hear "funny noises." That was disregarded, however, as quarterback Tiggles had been hearing funny noises in his head ever since that Edmonton game when he had blocked a kick with his nose.

Quarterback Zykke, in a fit of pique, had deliberately tuned Coach Crane out and had spent most of the first quarter listening to instructions from the opposition coach. Zykke's explanation was, "He plays Elvis Presley records between plays and I dig his reboop better than yours, so there."

In a desperate move, Coach Crane turned to his bench and plucked at the sleeve of a scrawny wretch, who was breathing nasally at the end of the bench. This was quarterback Quigg. With pleading in his voice, Coach Crane said, "Quigg, you're my last hope. I know that you have never played football before, but I know that you graduated with honors in electronics. You alone can save the day."

Wiping his nose on his sleeve, quarterback Quigg passed Coach Crane off with a disdainful sneer and trotted into the field, muttering, "Trouble with these other jerks is they don't know the foist rule of radio diction. You gotta say it with the lips, the teeth and the tip of the tongue."

Feverishly, Coach Crane called to assistant coach Vern Linskeg to take over the master control set. Linskeg twirled dials, blurted his call letters and awaited quarterback Quigg's answer.

Across the static came Quigg's voice. "I know that's you, assistant coach Linskeg and don't you dare shout at me. We don't like you. In fact nobody on this team likes you. It was in the papers."

An alien voice broke suddenly into the conversation. It was a sweet, wheedling voice.

"Fullbacks, are you tired of a soup diet. Is your mouth logged off where once a proud stand of teeth stood? To preserve your dainty smile, try Mother Morgan's Metal Mouthpieces, the only mouthpieces with the secret ingredient, iron. Remember, the choppers you save may be your own."

Furiously, Coach Crane turned to a team director, standing beside the bench. "What's this?" Coach Crane demanded.

"Well," said the director. "It don't look like we're going to get any of that payoff money, so we are selling commercial spots on your broadcasts. A penny saved... you know..."

Cougars Defeat Ice-Machine; Rally to Tie With Warriors

CRU CLAMPS VETO ON SIGNAL SHENNANIGANS

TORONTO (CP)—Under present rules, Canadian football clubs cannot use radio communications between coaches and players.

Several teams in the National Football League in the U.S. have been using radio devices to signal between the coach and the quarterback. Usually the receiving device is concealed in the player's helmet.

Harry McBrien, CRU secretary, said today he hadn't heard of any Canadian club planning such signals and anyway there is a specific rule in the 1956 rule book which says:

"There shall be no communication, either verbally or by signal of any kind, between a player who is on the field-of-play to or from a non-player who is on or off the field-of-play."

FACES TOUGHEST TEST

Swaps' Chances '100-1 Against'

CAMDEN, N.J. (UP)—Swaps, whose fighting heart carried him to fame and riches on the race track, today faced the biggest test of his fabulous career—a life or death struggle in a stall at Garden State Park.

The 1955 Kentucky derby winner, a regular odds-on favorite at the post, was confronted with the longest odds of his career in his battle against a leg fracture which could result in his destruction.

"It's 100-to-1 against him," Dr. William Miller, track veterinarian said. "He'll be a miracle horse if he pulls through."

The only hopeful report was issued by trainer M. H. Tenney, who said early this morning that Swaps "is better than he was Sunday."

"His temperature is normal, his eyes are bright and he eats and sleeps as any horse would under such conditions," Tenney said.

"The victory moved Flyers into a first-place tie with Brandon in the prairie section of the league while Royals, making their first prairie appearance of the young season, remained in a first-place tie with Seattle in the coast division.

Len Lundie, Tony Leswick and Billy McNeill, who now leaves for Detroit Red Wings of the National League, scored the other Edmonton goals.

Dick Roberge got the New Westminster score late in the first period.

Vic High Booters Defeat Oak Bay

Victoria High School completely outclassed Oak Bay in the second half as they rattled in four unanswered goals to down the Bays, 5-0, in the opening game of the Inter-High School Junior Soccer League.

Held to a lone marker by Don Ballard in the first half, Vic High brought forth all their offensive power in the second period as Barry Harvey scored once and passed to Ballard for another goal. Adding to the total was Doug Lee, who also tallied twice.

Mount View's scheduled game with Mount Douglas High was cancelled when Mount Douglas was unable to field a team.

LOS ANGELES—Orlando Zulueta, 113, Havana, outpointed Don Jordan, 118, Los Angeles, 10-1.

Figures Say It's So... Mantle Best Slugger

NEW YORK (AP)—Mickey Mantle won the American League slugging championship in 1956 with the highest average in 15 years. The New York Yankees' centre fielder piled up 376 total bases in 533 times at bat for a .705 mark.

Figures compiled by The Associated Press today also show Duke Snider of Brooklyn Dodgers was the National League's pace-setter. He edged Milwaukee's Joe Adcock—598 to 597.

The titles were the second for both Mantle and Snider. Mickey was the top man in 1955 with 611 while Snider was high in 1953 when he nipped Eddie Mathews of Milwaukee by a narrow margin—6271 to 6269.

Mantle, who also led the junior circuit in batting, runs batted in and home runs, numbered 79 extra base hits among his 188 safeties last season. In addition to his 52 four-baggers, the 24-year-old switch hitter had 22 doubles and five triples.

Ted Williams of Boston Red Sox, runner-up to Mantle in '56 with a .603 average, was the last player to have a better than .705 slugging mark. He finished with 735 in 1941.

In fact, only six other players have slugged as high as .700. Babe Ruth of the Yankees did it nine times; Jimmy Foxx of the Red Sox and Philadelphia Athletics had it three times; Rogers Hornsby did it twice with St. Louis Cards; and Lou Gehrig of the Yanks, Stan Musial of the Cards and Hack Wilson of Chicago Cubs each reached .700 once. Ruth holds the record—847 in 1920.

Major League Ball for Coast Within 10 Years Says Harridge

CHICAGO (AP)—Will Harridge observed his 71st birthday anniversary in robust health Tuesday and looked forward to continuing service as president of the American League.

He was virtually shanghaied into baseball by the late Ban Johnson, American League founder, in 1911.

Johnson took a liking to young Harridge's ability in routing clubs while working as clerk in Chicago for the Wabash Railroad.

Johnson hired him and Harridge has been with the league ever since, the last quarter-century as president.

"It may come as somewhat of a surprise to club owners to know that I have a contract in league president," Harridge said in an interview.

Brown Scores Two Goals; Tackle Regals Tonight

Victoria 4, Winnipeg 4
By BILL RAYNER

WINNIPEG—Victoria Cougars, almost laid low by Winnipeg Arena's emergence into the machine age, came from behind in an old-fashioned cliff-hanger Monday night to tie the Warriors, 4-4, in the first game of their opening WHL Prairie tour.

Before the Cougars showed up, the arena had purchased a $10,000 ice-shaving and flooding machine, with which to cure their ice difficulties. The result was disastrous for the machine and almost so for Victoria.

With the machine working before the game, Cougars were down quickly, 2-0, in the first period. The monster managed to get the ice cleaned again, after a 15-minute delay, and Cougars were still down, 3-1, after the second period.

Then the old-fashioned manual system was used before the third period, and the Cougars responded with a resurgence of their own, coming from behind, 4-1, to tie the score in the last two minutes of regulation time.

The teams went through a scoreless overtime session. The tie was eminently satisfying to playing coach Colin Kilburn and his careful mixture of rookies and veterans. It was Victoria's first point on Winnipeg ice in two seasons and the third overtime game in four stars for the Warriors.

The ice brought a frown from the Cougars, however, and was deemed worse than ever. For the first two periods, anyway.

Wayne Has Best Game

Wayne Brown, with two goals and an assist and one of his best road trip games in many seasons, led the Cougars. Doug Anderson scored once as did Bruce Carmichael.

Winnipeg scorers were old pros Billy Mosienko and Skippy Burchell. Pat Hannigan and Cecil Hoekstra.

Hannigan started things off early for Winnipeg at 2:22 of the first, breaking in from the right side with Cougars a man short to beat Marcel Pelletier on a low shot. Seconds later Hoekstra scored with a screened backhand from well out.

Then early in the second, Mosienko broke in alone on Pelletier but was foiled neatly. On the next play, Mosienko came in again, and lost control of the idly rolling puck. Pelletier swung at it like Mickey Mantle, missed, and it was 3-0. Brown, on the first of two tidy efforts, came out of the penalty box to take Anderson's pass and go in easily all alone for Cougars' first tally.

After Mosienko made it 4-1, early in the third, Brown started the Cougars on the comeback trail by fielding Gordie Haworth's high pass with his glove, dropping the puck to the ice and slapping it past Ed Johnston in the Winnipeg nets.

Anderson made it 4-3 with less than three minutes remaining. As he, Kilburn, Doug MacAuley and Nelson Bullock were all standing around in front of Johnston with not another Warrior in sight, Anderson's drive found an unguarded corner.

Brown set up the tying goal by stealing the puck and passing it to Kilburn, who backhanded to Carmichael on the doorstep.

Extra-Hole Match

Vic Lea, putting and approaching with a deadly touch, won the Uplands Golf Club men's championship Sunday when he scored a narrow victory over Dale Dalziel in a match that went to the 37th hole before a winner was decided.

Lea was one up at the end of the morning 18 holes and still held the one-up lead after 27.

After Lea won the 28th to go two up, the youthful Dalziel fought back to win three in a row and put Lea one down.

The 32nd hole was halved but Lea won the 33rd to square the match and the 34th was halved. Dalziel was dormant when Lea won the 35th but Dalziel calmly won the 36th with a par four to force the extra hole.

Lea won the match and the club title on the 37th when he took a five to Dalziel's six.

Lea, previously had won the first flight championship in the annual Totem Pole Tournament at Jasper.

Doug Peden OUTDOOR REPORT

Less than a year ago, the idea of a spring hunting season on blue grouse was batted around with considerable vigor during a meeting of the Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association.

The idea was prompted by a belief that our blue grouse population was near a peak and statements by biologists that a spring season, aimed mainly at adult cock birds which normally make up less than five per cent of the annual hunting kill, would not seriously trim the basic supply.

Fortunately the idea, although perhaps biologically sound, was allowed to die a natural death. But we did get an increase in the grouse limit to eight birds per day.

Conditions were excellent during last spring's nesting season. There was an early hatch, brood counts were good and the stage was apparently set for the kind of shooting our fathers used to talk about.

Yet, the season now heading into its final stages, will be remembered by many hunters as "the year we couldn't find the blue grouse."

What happened? Actually the picture is not as gloomy as many would paint it. Some of the veteran scattergunners, wise in the ways of the unpredictable blues and whose legs will still take them to the tops of the higher hills where blue grouse usually hang out in October, have been getting their share of birds. Those who have continued to prowling the slash and lower valleys have been lucky to come home with one or two.

Early-season hunting through Vancouver Island equalled the poorest in living memory. And although October results have been close to normal, it can in no way be considered a good season.

To those of us whose knowledge of blue grouse is mostly gained from a few trips into the woods each fall, it seemed logical to believe that something had happened between the optimistic days of June and the opening of the hunting season to drastically trim the blue grouse broods.

Berry Crop Below Average

There were many theories. Last winter's unusually early and severe cold snap was the favored culprit. Blackberry, salal and other plants were damaged so heavily, it was said, that this summer's berry crop was far below average and young birds died from lack of food. The warm, dry summer also took its share of blame for drying up berries and leaving the birds without sufficient food on the nesting grounds.

Disease was also considered. Grouse are highly susceptible to many parasites that can take a big toll of young birds. It was known that the blues left their summer range several weeks ahead of their normal schedule but few were willing to believe that some silent killer hadn't invaded their ranks.

Our game biologists assure us it isn't so. Biologists have a wonderful faculty for explaining things. They can use technical terms in a comforting way that makes an apparently serious situation seem almost normal. Theirs is a knowledge that comes from years of study, augmented by fact and surveys. And time has proved them more often right than wrong.

No Apparent Cause for Worry

Don Robinson, regional game biologist at Nanaimo, says there is no apparent cause for worry over our blue grouse population.

Field surveys taken in the spring and summer showed good numbers of blue grouse and a satisfactory early hatch of healthy chicks. Few dead birds were found and there was no reason to suspect an abnormal mortality rate among young grouse.

The dry summer, says Don, started the grouse on their annual migration by mid-August. Biologists believe they are up in higher timber in close to their usual numbers, most of them safe from all but the more ambitious hunters and not due to come down until next spring.

From personal experience this season, it appears that the biologists probably will again be proven right.

On five trips in the Sooke district I took 16 blues, including one limit. While this was not a high score, it corresponded favorably with what the section had yielded in previous years.

In another way-it was unusual. Of the grouse taken, only three were young birds. Five were hens and eight were adult hooters. Young birds usually make up by far the largest portion of the hunting kill and two hens are normally downed for each hooter.

While a count on 16 birds cannot be considered indicative, it is still difficult to shake the feeling that young grouse might have taken a beating last summer.

As Don Robinson says, we won't know the answer until surveys are made on the nesting grounds next spring. Until then we can only hope.

Bomber Stars One-Two in WFU Scoring

WINNIPEG (CP)—Halfback Buddy Leake of Winnipeg Blue Bombers lost his lead in the individual scoring race in one Western Interprovincial Football Union weekend game but regained it in the second.

Teammate Bob McNamara roared to a record-tying six touchdowns Saturday as Bombers downed B.C. Lions 40-8 to push his total points for the season to 78 while Leake picked up four converts to drop to the runner-up spot with 76. But in Monday's losing 21-11 effort against Edmonton Eskimos, Leake scored a touchdown and a convert while McNamara went scoreless.

Statistics compiled by The Canadian Press for games including Oct. 15 show that Leake now has 83 points on eight touchdowns, 2 converts, three field goals and one single.

Missing All-Star Game Big Break for Detroit

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

General Manager Jack Adams figures his Detroit Red Wings got off to a fine start in the National Hockey League this season because they didn't have to worry about the league's all-star game.

Each year the defending Stanley Cup champions opposed the league's All-Stars in a pre-season engagement. For the first time in three seasons the Wings were not the Stars' opposition.

Montreal Canadiens, who ended Detroit's two-year championship streak last spring, took on the All-Stars Oct. 9 and battled to a 1-1 draw.

"In the past when we had to build a team for the all-star game we had to step on it," Adams says. "This season that pressure was off and we were able to analyze, juggle and experiment a great deal more than in other years."

"I think we benefited from the extra time we were able to put in at training camp. The records of our first three league games show that. Last fall we had to play in the all-star game and we got off to our worst start in 20 years."

Wings are in first place with three victories in as many games for six points. Toronto Maple Leafs and Boston Bruins are tied for second spot with three points. New York Rangers and Canadiens have two points while Chicago's Black Hawks hold their usual cellar position, winless in three games.

Coach Phil Watson, who watched his Rangers get beaten 2-1 by Wings last Sunday, agrees that Detroit is stronger.

"Maybe it's Detroit's year again," he says. "These Wings are in perfect shape. I watched them on television against Toronto Saturday and they really outclassed the Leafs. They outclassed us, too."

Delvecchio isn't expected back for at least seven more weeks.

In both games they seemed to tire after the first period but they still had enough. I don't say we won't still take Detroit on the season. But they do look as though they've got another big team."

Rangers nearly beat out Detroit last season for second spot, losing it by two points.

The Blueshirts open their home season tonight against Boston in the only game. Leafs are at Detroit and Hawks visit Montreal in Thursday night's games.

Wings will be without right winger Bill Dineen and Alex Delvecchio when they tangle with Leafs. Dineen suffered a knee injury last Thursday and will be out for another week.

Delvecchio isn't expected back for at least seven more weeks.

MARKET SUMMARIES

Prices Stand Still On Slow Toronto

The stock market at Toronto was just about at a standstill as far as prices were concerned near the close of trading today.

It opened slightly higher, but began drifting down after the first hour of trading. By mid-afternoon prices seemed to stop going in any direction.

The market continued lower in quiet trading, but rails advanced against the trend.

At Toronto Consolidated Halliwell was an active trader in the closing minutes and moved ahead 21 cents to $2.26.

Other coppers, however, moved in a narrower range. Chubbuck Mining dipped 20 cents and a half dozen other stocks lost about 10 cents. There were a few scattered issues showing small gains.

Aluminum and MacLaren Power and Paper lost two points. Other stocks on the downside included Chatco Steel, Chrysler, General Motors, Canada Cement and Argus. Trans General Investments were a few winners.

AT NEW YORK steel backed away from their rise of Tuesday as Republic dropped about a point, U.S. Steel and Bethlehem major fractions.

Most Canadian issues were lower on the New York exchange. Aluminum Ltd. was off 2 1/2, McIntyre lost 1/2 and International Nickel slipped 1/4.

Walker-Gooderham was down 1/4. Hudson Bay Mining advanced 1/4. Canadian issues were quiet.

AT MONTREAL Price and Great Lakes added 1/4 in the papers while McGill firmed 1/2 among refining oils. Base Metals were mixed, with Hudson Bay up 1/4 and Aluminum off 2 points.

Power Corporation and B.C. Telephone climbed 1/2 on the utilities list. Banks and beverages were mixed under 1/2 point while steel recorded little movement.

AT LONDON the stock market was firm and active today and business broadened.

Apart from a certain amount of optimism regarding the Suez Canal situation there was little to help sentiment. British funds continued to make progress and gains of up to 5/16 were recorded. Oil shares, however, lacked a decided trend.

CPR Ex-President, D.C. Coleman Dies

MONTREAL (CP)—D. C. Coleman, 77, former chairman and president of Canadian Pacific Railway, died at his home early today following an illness of several months.

Mr. Coleman, a native of Carleton Place, Ont., succeeded the late Sir Edward Beatty as president of the CPR in 1942. The following year he was named chairman of the board. He served as president and chairman of the board until 1947 when he retired. He remained a director of the company until his death.

WORKED WAY UP

Mr. Coleman was appointed president at 63, just 43 years after he joined the company as a clerk in Fort William, Ont. He was the company's fifth president, successor to the transportation heritage built up under Lord Mount Stephen, Sir William van Horne and Lord Shaugnessy before Sir Edward Beatty.

Under Mr. Coleman's supervision two of the greatest problems in the history of the railway were met and solved.

He was vice-president for western lines during the lean depression years of the 1930s when widespread readjustments were necessary—particularly in the west—to cope with rapidly dropping revenues. And as senior vice-president during the first years of the Second World War, much of the work of expansion to meet soaring traffic needs fell to him during the illness of Sir Edward Beatty.

WIDE INTERESTS

Experience gained while working up through all grades from a railway clerk made him an expert on railway problems.

A student, scholar and economist his interests were extended to the field of air transportation during the Second World War when the CPR embarked on the development of air line subsidiaries.

Mr. Coleman took a deep personal interest in the move and became chairman of Canadian Pacific Airlines. At that time also he was chairman of Canadian Pacific Steamships, and in other fields of industry and finance was director of the Bank of Montreal, and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, among others.

SPORTS ENTHUSIAST

He became western vice-president in 1918 and moved to Montreal in 1934 to become second-in-command of the entire system.

Deeply interested in education, Mr. Coleman served as chairman of the board of governors at the University of Manitoba during the depression. When he moved to Montreal he became chairman of the executive committee of the University of Bishop's College at Lennoxville, Que. He held honorary degrees from both universities. He also became a governor of McGill University in Montreal.

real Canadians of the National Hockey League.

A collector of Canadiana, his library, particularly a section dealing with western Canada, is considered one of the best in the country.

In 1906 Mr. Coleman married Anna Grant, daughter of Alexander Grant of Calgary. They had two sons—James, well-known Canadian sports writer, and Maj. Rowan, M.C., who served overseas during the Second World War. Mrs. Coleman died in 1920, and in 1922, Mr. Coleman married Florence Lynch of Ottawa, daughter of William J. Lynch.

Funeral arrangements have not yet been completed.

TESTING THE POLITICAL WINDS—Two pillow-like plastic balloons, each 12 feet high and eight feet wide, are shown at the moment of launching in downtown Minneapolis, Minn., at the start of a zany "political" race. The elephant and donkey symbols are inflated with helium rather than political oratory and the winner will be the one which stays up longest. The stunt was sponsored by a manufacturer of high-altitude meteorological balloons.

BUT HE LOVES CATSUP

Restaurateur Hates Parsnips

By TONY DICKASON

He hates parsnips. This is the president of the 18,000-member Canadian Restaurant Association.

R. S. Sheppard, from Aylmer, Ont., this year heads an industry which grosses more than $500,000,000 annually.

He's here on a presidential tour, hosted by Ted Brand, president of the Victoria and Vancouver Island branch of the association.

From Aylmer, he admits to a love of ketchup, or catsup. Mr. Sheppard said inspection standards of restaurants today is not rigid enough at the municipal level, though he said level of restaurant catering, facilities, and cleanliness had risen considerably the past five years.

Fed thoroughly by numerous caterers across the country, the chief restaurateur said "I'm going to grow out of my suits before I get home."

Points he made: Without training in the catering business it is useless to start up as you'll go broke; buffet service in cafes is growing as people have more leisure time; taurants get 14 per cent of to eat-away from home; rest the family food dollar; regional dishes should be stressed.

If the association finds out restaurants sell "bottle," that is, liquor, they are out of the organization, he said.

On food, he said, "Whenever you talk that subject, I can see a rib roast, or a steak."

Marilyn's Swim 'Dangerous Task' Says Paris Doctor

MONTREAL (CP)—Marilyn Bell's 1954 swim across Lake Ontario was characterized here as "a shockingly dangerous task to impose on a little girl of 16."

Dr. B. Chailley Bert, director of the Institute of Physical Culture of the University of Paris, said that throughout the world coaches and athletic directors call on young people for tasks beyond their strength.

Feats of endurance should not be asked of athletes "under about 22 or 23." Instead, he said, young persons should concentrate on games stressing agility and quickness of reaction.

Science had discovered that fatigue in young persons produced toxins, which could affect the heart if they remained in the body, Dr. Bert said.

An athlete should be at his best for most sports between the ages of 25 and 35. He might be a little slower at 30 than at 20, but if he was not "burnt out" by too much activity at too early an age, his endurance should be greater.

New Garbage Pulverizer Studied Here

Big Plant Could Make Fertilizer

Victoria and Esquimalt councils will be asked to consider a new form of garbage disposal which would cost nothing and would provide free compost for local parks.

Disposal would be by pulverizer and bacteria. Recommending the investigation of a system promoted by Organic Corporation of America is the Victoria-Esquimalt Union Board of Health.

Chairman, Esquimalt Council G. K. Sammon, explained to the board Tuesday the U.S. firm would be willing to install a disposal plant here capable of processing 150 tons of garbage in an eight-hour day.

The company would build a plant on city land in return for all the city garbage and trash. This would be reproduced as fertilizer by the plant and sold, with a portion of free compost being supplied the municipalities in return for the garbage.

Tin cans, bottles, everything, would be converted by the bacteria, the chairman stated. An alternative plan suggested by the firm would be for the city to erect the plant, lease it to the company, and the company would buy all the fertilizer produced.

The board moved the matter be presented to both councils.

Burning Passion

BURBANK, Calif. (AP)—Police called this a case of flaming love. They said Vincent Louis Fassola, 24, entered the home of his girl friend, Arlene Sutter, 21, stole her purse and set three fires. Fassola was booked on suspicion of burglary and arson. Damage to the house was estimated at $4,500.

Veteran Blood Donors Honored By Governor

Lieutenant-Governor Frank Ross presented certificates Tuesday commending donations of 20 or more pints of blood from each of 33 individuals.

Two of the donors, Hugh Pigott and George Wolfe, both of whom have given more than 40 pints each, received pins along with the certificates.

Those who received awards were:

BETWEEN TIMES

By

MONTE ROBERTS

We herewith announce the winner of the tinsel-plated syrup server for the most saccharine "news" story of the year.

It goes to the Reuters reporter—mercifully anonymous—who perpetrated this gob of spun-sugar candy:

"ARUSHA, Tanganyika (Reuters)—Princess Margaret today flashed a brilliant smile at her first meeting with a British district commissioner named Francis Townsend.

"Francis Townsend, brother of her rejected suitor, Group Capt. Peter Townsend, met Margaret at a Baraza tribal meeting of 40,000 fierce Masai warriors.

"As Townsend stepped to the dais to shake her hand, Margaret looked him full in the eyes and smiled warmly. And when the Baraza was over, the princess looked back from her car in Townsend's direction."

In addition to the tinsel-plated syrup server, the unidentified reporter is in line for an all-expenses paid trip to the moon, given for the year's finest flight of fancy.

Naturally, Margaret looked this Townsend full in the eyes and smiled warmly.

After all, for better than 20 years, she has been taught to look people in the eyes and smile warmly, whether the name happens to be Townsend, Tompkins, or Chief Womby Mombly of Lower Bachuanaland.

And as for looking back over her shoulder as her car drove off, the accomplished princess is much too good a trouper to turn her back to the audience if it can be avoided. Or possibly she didn't care where she was going, she just wanted to see where she had been.

If I seem a little snarly on this matter, it is because I am fed to the teeth with the marshmallowy writing of reporters who are either star struck or complete hypocrites.

And I suspect the latter. I have the highest regard for the hard-working Royal Family, and the deepest sympathy for the arduous, showcase life they are compelled to lead, in the interests of commonwealth solidarity.

But I have no use whatsoever for descriptions of warm smiles, fleeting glances, sad eyes and other fancied signs of emotional strain which exist largely in the maudlin minds of these alleged reporters.

In regard to news of the Royal Family, just as in regard to other news, let us stick to facts.

And let Peter Townsend go for his trip around the world accompanied by an occasional small paragraph back of the classified ads.

I thank you.

Cat Limit Proposed In City

A by-law to limit the number of cats which may be kept by any one city householder is under consideration by city parks committee.

The committee today received a petition asking some action be taken against a Duchess Street resident who allegedly keeps 20 to 30 cats.

The petitioners, 13 neighbors, state the cats are a nuisance, unsanitary, uproot gardens.

The committee, headed by Ald. Robert Macmillan, resolved to ask the City's Protection League here to recommend a limit to apply. At present there is a city regulation which limits dog-owners to five canine pets.

The committee was told the problem is not new to the city. Recently pound authorities were required to dispose of 35 cats when the woman owner was sent to hospital and could not care for them.

Another letter to the committee recommended dog licence fees be raised to $15 or $20 to discourage keeping of dogs in the city. Resident W. R. Walters complained of free-running dogs. He will be advised to report any violation of regulations governing dogs to the pound.

Tot Puts Car In Gear, Runs Over Boy

Four Victoria and district children were admitted to the Royal Jubilee Hospital Tuesday afternoon following three accidents involving two bicycles and a car.

All are in favorable condition today, the hospital reported.

At Sooke, one-year-old Stephen Radford precipitated an accident which injured himself and James Hamilton, nine, about 4 p.m. as he was being placed in the family car by his mother, Mrs. Clarence Radford.

The car was parked in its driveway with engine running and the child apparently moved the automatic gear shift lever, sending the car rolling in reverse.

It threw Mrs. Radford away from the door and rolled over the Hamilton boy before coming to rest.

Stephen has a head injury and bruises, and the older boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hamilton, neighbors, has bruises and scratches.

At about 12:30 p.m., Terry Turner, nine, 1712 Denman, was thrown over the handle bars of his bicycle near 1611 Bay and taken to hospital with a groin injury.

Victoria Ambulance took 12-year-old Denis Clement, Beach Drive, Brentwood, to Jubilee with a head injury suffered in a tumble from his bicycle about 4 p.m.

Malahat Lookout Site Possible Picnic Spot

Property of the old Malahat Lookout, not the Malahat Chalet, will be considered by the provincial parks department as a picnic site.

A report Tuesday referred to the property, suggested by Victoria Publicity Commissioner G. I. Warren for development, as the burned-out chalet site.

The Malahat Chalet is still in operation. The Malahat Lookout burned to the ground some years ago.

B.C. Seeks Improved Highway Deal

British Columbia is trying to make a better deal with Ottawa before signing the new Trans-Canada Highway agreement.

Deadline for signing the agreement, which provides for higher federal contributions, is Dec. 9.

Highways Minister P. A. Gagliardi said today B.C. is trying to have the new Upper Levels Highway from West Vancouver to Horseshoe Bay considered part of the Trans-Canada network.

The minister said an attempt also will be made to get Ottawa to recognize the new Second Narrows Bridge as part of the system.

"If we can't include the Second Narrows Bridge, we should be able to include everything on the north shore because this section of the highway is part of a sea route (Horseshoe Bay ferry traffic to Vancouver Island)," said Mr. Gagliardi.

THREE UNSIGNED

B.C. is one of three provinces which hasn't yet signed Trans-Canada Highway agreements. The others are Quebec and Newfoundland.

Mr. Gagliardi stressed there is no dispute with Ottawa.

"We will sign the agreement before the Dec. 9 deadline," he said. "We are simply trying to negotiate the best possible deal for B.C."

He said Premier Bennett will discuss the highway agreement on a forthcoming visit to Ottawa.

The new Trans-Canada agreement calls for Ottawa to pay 50 per cent of construction cost, but on vital sections this contribution will be boosted to as high as 90 per cent. Under the old agreement, costs were split evenly.

1960 TARGET

The 4,600-mile road is to be completed coast-to-coast by 1960. Latest available figures show that of the 4,580 total Trans-Canada mileage, 1,991 miles had been graded and 1,392 paved up to last Aug. 31. And from 1950 until last Oct. 6 the province had committed a total of $280,783,020 for highway work of which the federal share was $147,672,200, including provision for the 90 per cent formula where applicable.

MUCH DONE ALREADY Of the paving, 185 miles has been done in British Columbia, where construction costs have run as high as $1,000,000 a mile because of the rugged terrain. B.C. has also graded 292 miles of highway.

Grading paving mileage totals for other provinces up to last August: Alberta 220,210; Saskatchewan 389,325; Manitoba 181,187; Ontario 438,369; New Brunswick 75,677; Prince Edward Island 66,499; Nova Scotia 51,040; Newfoundland 237,040.

In addition 162 bridges have been completed, including 41 in British Columbia alone.

Girl Collapses At Grave Trial

MINK JUST LOVES HIS CARP BUT CARPING CRITICS OBJECT

City parks authorities are trying to trap a wild mink which is believed to have taken up residence in Beacon Hill Park.

City parks administrator Herbert Warren said today a mink has killed several mallard ducks and is suspected of having made a dinner out of a three-foot-long golden carp which has disappeared after 15 years in the upper lake at the park.

A box trap has been set on an island in the lake.

Expropriation For Orphanage?

Suggested City Hall Site 'Not for Sale' Says Board

Expropriation may be the only course open to civic authorities if decision is reached to use the site of the Protestant Orphanage for a new Victoria-Saanich municipal hall.

Acting president of the orphanage board of management, said today, "The board does not intend to sell the orphanage."

He made the statement following a meeting of the two-council committee Tuesday which indicated the orphanage or Topaz Park would be ultimate site of proposed $2,000,000 joint hall.

A city legal authority said today, "Power is given in the Municipal Act to expropriate."

Ald. Mrs. Lily Wilson, chairman of the city welfare committee said she felt the Hillside-Cook hilltop site was the ideal for a new hall. She added she did not feel there was any possibility the orphanage site would be taken over without due compensation and an alternative site being made available to the children's home.

Meanwhile, Mr. Tuck reported today the Orphanage has been besieged with calls from parents of children living there. "They are worried about what will happen. He said numerous orphans who grew up there and now live as adults in the community also telephoned their objections to any sale of the property."

HOME VISITED

City alderman Robert Macmillan, who suggested the Orphanage site to the joint municipal committee, visited the home Tuesday afternoon with city manager C. C. Wyatt. "Some committee inspected the home yesterday," said Mr. Tuck. The children were all upset. Mrs. (Ada) Barnard (matron of the home), called all the children together and told them they would not lose their home.

"This site is so suitable to our purposes," continued Mr. Tuck, "that it wouldn't be the easiest thing in the world for them to come up with any suitable alternative."

"It is true it is an old building, but it is sound." It was built in 1893.

Mr. Tuck took issue with remarks made by Alderman Macmillan Tuesday.

The alderman had said, "It is no longer an orphanage but a paid proposition for children of broken homes."

He added today, "I didn't say they weren't doing a good job."

NO PROFIT

But Mr. Tuck said the statement inferred the home is carried on for profit. "Obviously that is not the case."

"A nominal charge is made where there is a parent able to pay, but we state as emphatically as possible that ability to pay is not now and never has been a criterion of entry."

Capital Region Planning Board was slated to meet this afternoon to study the whole matter of proposed sites for a joint municipal hall. A firm recommendation is expected to be sent to the committee supporting either Topaz Park or the Orphanage as a site. But other sites are still being considered. Only downtown sites have been ruled out by the committee.

Ferguson Asks Trial by Jury

PORT ALBERNI — Norma Agnes Walton, 19, Alberni, collapsed in tears today at a preliminary hearing of a charge offering indignity to a dead human body, laid against David Windsor Ferguson, 19.

The young girl, one of five who spent part of the evening of Sept. 23 with Ferguson and William Nelson, described events that took place prior to the opening of a grave in Greenwood Cemetery and removal of a corpse.

BOYS SOBER

She managed to say only that when Nelson and Ferguson picked up herself and Elsie Krevensky, 17, at 9:30 p.m. on the fateful night, the boys were sober. Asked repeatedly to speak up, she finally broke down and had to be taken from the courtroom.

Miss Krevensky said she went to the cemetery with Norma and the boys. After an argument the boys left the car, she said, and she subsequently heard the sound of glass being broken. At that time the boys were not drunk, she said, but in a "gay mood."

Third witness was Wilma Kokkes, 16, who said she was with the boys at 12:30 a.m. on the same night when they bought some chow mein, then went to the garage where Nelson worked to pick up a length of chain.

HALF DUG

On arrival at the cemetery she saw a grave half dug, she said, and one of the boys started digging some more.

"I asked them to drive me home," she said. The boys refused, and after leaving once and returning to the cemetery on foot, she found the boys ready to leave.

E. D. Strongtharm, Nanaimo lawyer, is representing Ferguson. Ferguson has elected for trial by judge and jury, and if convicted, and unless he elects, he will stand trial at the Spring Assize in Nanaimo.

Earlier Nelson pleaded guilty in police court to a charge of offering indignity to a dead human body and was sentenced to serve two years less a day determinate and two years less a day indeterminate in the Day Offenders' Unit at Oakalla.

The hearing is continuing.

Thieves Hide Out In Bowladrome

Thieves who apparently hid themselves in Gibson's Bowladrome, 914 Yates, before closing time Monday, roamed through the premises overnight, breaking a window and opening locked doors.

Police were told by the management Tuesday someone climbed atop a row of lockers to a ledge from which an office window was broken and entry made to the office.

Tools were taken from a safe and used on a billiard room door to pry off a hasp, then to force other doors.

Nothing was reported stolen.

Extra Towel Racks a Help When You've Extra Guests

By PENNY SAVER

When guests arrive, there are dozens of little things that must be done to assure comfort. For one, there's the laying out of fresh and pretty towels. Here, we run into difficulty, for there may be plenty of towels, and such, but where to hang them up? Even a large bathroom will look cluttered with towels hanging over shower rods and tubs.

Extra towel bars are the answer, it would seem. Just buy a few. It's as simple as that! Rubber coated bars with strong suction cups to attach them to the wall are easily removed once the house is back to normal. Perhaps you'll find a place for them in the kitchen, pantry or maybe you'll find that you need it all the time right where you've put it, in the bathroom.

TODAY'S RECIPE

CHEESE-ONION PIE

Ingredients: 1½ cups water, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ cup uncooked white rice, ¼ teaspoon curry powder, ½ cup melted butter or margarine, 1½ cups cracker crumbs, 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 2 cups thinly sliced onions (halve large slices), 1 cup milk, 2 eggs (beaten), 1½ cups grated sharp cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon curry powder, ¼ teaspoon black pepper.

Method: Put the water, 1 teaspoon salt and rice in a 2-quart saucepan. Bring to a vigorous boil. Turn the heat down low. Cover and simmer over this low heat 14 minutes. Remove the saucepan from the heat and leave the lid on until ready to use, at least 10 minutes.

While the rice cooks, add the ¼ cup melted butter to the 1½ cups cracker crumbs. Pour over and through the cracker crumbs. (Crumbs are easily made by rolling crackers between layers of waxed paper or putting through a fine bladed food chopper.) Press the crumbs over the bottom and sides of a greased deep 10-inch round pie plate holding about 6 cups.

Melt the 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a saucepan. Add the onions and cook slowly until tender and slightly yellow. Spread over the bottom of the pie plate.

After the rice cooks, stir in the milk, eggs, cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, curry powder and black pepper. Mix well. Pour over the onions.

Bake in a pre-heated 325° F. oven for 45 minutes or until a knife inserted in the centre comes out clean. It is important that the oven is at 325° F. and not too hot.

Allow to stand several minutes before cutting into wedges.

This recipe makes 8 servings.

WHY GROW OLD?

By JOSEPHINE LOWMAN

While the general public is much better nourished today than ever before, the majority of people do not yet apply to their daily lives the facts now known about nutrition.

Last spring at the New England Conference on Human Nutrition which met in Boston, Dr. James M. Hundley (Chief, Laboratory Research, National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases, National Institute of Health, Bethesda, Md.) told us that teen-agers, over-weights, and older people, are the poorest nourished of all.

The idea that a person who is fat must be healthy is a fallacy. Often, overweights are anemic and tired because of malnourishment in spite of their extra pounds. The fact that they are obese may indicate that they have eaten so much and so many of the devitalized high caloric foods that little appetite or space remains for adequate amounts of the foods necessary for good nutrition.

All sorts of luscious tidbits, in-between meal snacks, rich desserts, sauces, salad dressings, gravy and fried foods, may have dulled the wish for essential foods and piled on the pounds.

I have written recently about why teen-agers frequently are malnourished. This is mainly a matter of in-between meal snacks and irregular meals.

It is easy to see why the older person might fall into this trap. Physical activity has decreased and the individual actually needs less food. This makes it even more important that the food he does eat is the right kind. Lack of appetite may be a problem.

Also many older people live alone. They no longer have hungry younger members of the family for whom to plan and prepare food. Only a real interest in good nutrition will make the effort to get variety in the diet seem worthwhile. Older people may find chow-

Maybe you need this change in your diet—consume protective foods such as milk products, fruits, vegetables and protein foods.

ing a problem because of loss of teeth. Dental defects should be remedied and, when necessary, baby foods can be used. Meats are available in these as well as vegetables.

Many folks think of certain of the protective foods as essential only for the young. Actually youth was good nutrition in older years. The older generations need these foods for repair and maintenance if not for growing. Milk is one of the foods which often is neglected, yet the average individual of 65 is calcium poor.

Nutrition is a lifetime and an important job!

Parents Urged to Devote Full Time to Families

LONDON, Ont. (CP)—Most Rev. W. J. Smith, Roman Catholic bishop of Pembroke, said last weekend too many parents have gone "AWOL"—leaving children to fend for themselves.

Speaking as national director of the Catholic Women's League, he urged 250 delegates at the opening of its national convention to devote themselves to raising a family.

"Unless homes are the models they should be the country won't prosper in the things that count," Bishop Smith said.

He called women a "power-house of prayer" and asked them to pray for "God's guidance," needed if the world is to be "safe in the atomic future."

DECENCY DRIVE

Women, he said, are more likely to get God's guidance because they pray more, not because they have more time for prayer than men, but because "they come by it more naturally."

Ontario president Mrs. H. T. Donihue of Cornwall reported the effects of the CWL's campaign last year against salacious literature.

Twenty-one other civic and church groups presented a brief to Attorney-General Roberts of Ontario, asking that such books be banned and the Alberta government set up a special committee to deal with the matter.

As a result of the league's program of financial contributions to education, $63,000 was given to schools' equipment, prizes and scholarships.

As part of an effort to integrate immigrants into the CWL's activities 24,000 newcomers were greeted at Nova Scotia ports and provincial groups sent foreign-language newsletters to newly-arrived families.

Between Ourselves

By ELIZABETH FORBES

A proud wife sat in the Crystal Ballroom at the Empress Hotel last evening where the Cassenti Players presented a delightful program of music for woodwinds and horn. She was Mrs. George Zukerman.

Married to the clever young bassoon player who also is leader of the quintet that includes flute, clarinet, oboe and French horn, Mrs. Zukerman flew from Vancouver in the early evening to hear the concert.

"It's a long time since I've been at a concert where my husband was playing," she explained, "but, as the quintet is a fairly new venture—and he is so proud of it—I had to come."

It sounds easy when you say that Mrs. Zukerman flew from the mainland for the concert. In her case, however, it meant a lot of planning and some re-arrangement—as far as her own work is concerned.

No—she isn't a musician. "One in the family is enough," she says with an attractive shrug. Then with a proud lift of her head, "especially when he is as talented as my husband."

This vivacious young woman is a social worker with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. Her work includes such extra-curricular duties as speaking for the CNIB of an evening.

That's what she was slated to do last night.

When she discovered husband George was bringing his quintet here to play a first concert of the season under the auspices of the Victoria Musical Art Society she found a substitute to take her place and, in her own words, quietly spoken, "I came to Victoria."

Travelled to Israel With Husband

The Zukermans have been married for some years now. Soon after the wedding they went to New York, George's home city, then to Israel, where he fulfilled an engagement with the Israeli Symphony Orchestra, then back to New York. For the past three years they have been in Vancouver, where this talented young man is now a member of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra.

"We've just bought a house out Kerrisdale way," Mrs. Zukerman confessed with excitement. "It's quite different. Very modern. There are very few walls. Just angles. It reminds me of a New York penthouse—only down on the ground."

She sat pensively for a moment, looking into space. Then her brown eyes sparkled. "George loves it," she said—and you judge that what George loves is all right with her.

Any children? "No," Mrs. Zukerman tells you. "Only a Siamese cat. And I can tell you she is worse than any child. She runs the house."

Mrs. Zukerman was wearing a knitted dress of white wool with a knitted bolero of black wool. Carrying out the winter white theme were her eyeglasses which had heavy white rims in the pixy shape. Touching her fingers gently to the soft wool of her dress Mrs. Zukerman said, "George chose this dress for me and when I have it on he absolutely beams. I thought tonight might be a good time to wear it. What do you think?"

Watching George Zukerman's darkly mobile face and noting the way his eyes returned again and again to his wife as she sat in the front row of the hall, I was sure Mrs. Zukerman guessed right.

"Of course I like music, even if I am not a musician," was Mrs. Zukerman's answer to the obvious question. She confessed, however, that cooking is her hobby. Her pride and her joy, for that matter.

"I love to cook for people who enjoy good eating," she said. "and George and his friends do love good food."

Mrs. Zukerman doesn't like to talk about herself but mention her husband and you unleash a torrent of words. You hear of his work with the symphony. The pride he has in the quintet. His writings . . . "He has had many things printed, you know, and they are very good" . . . and his work with CBC . . . "he has done many talks for radio and for TV."

"You can see it is exciting being married to a man like my husband," she concludes.

And looking at her earnest face and her happy smile, I am willing to concede that she is right.

Family-Arranged Marriages Best, Says Iranian Student

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — Dark-home economics when she returns haired Mary Shukri from Baghdad to Iraq.

During her first year on this continent she has conducted a home economics survey in Washington, D.C., has spent two weeks on a Virginia farm and took a six-week biochemistry course at Cornell University.

"I think our way is best," she said. "It's not as romantic but in Iraq the divorce rate is only two of 100 marriages."

Miss Shukri, the first student from Iraq to study at Macdonald Institute, said that if an Iranian girl is opposed to marrying the man her family has chosen for her she needn't marry him.

"At first I was dubious about going out alone on dates," she said. "At home a respectable girl wouldn't think of it but here I find it is the thing to do."

Holder of a B. Sc. in chemistry, Miss Shukri is studying food and nutrition here, planning to teach Vey.

Installation of Missile Guns Studied for Canada's Arctic

By DAVE MCINTOSH
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP)—Defence planners now are beginning to study the possibility of installing anti-aircraft missile batteries in the Canadian Arctic.

They say establishment and maintenance of such a defensive system would be immeasurably simpler than trying to base fighter squadrons in the far North.

Gen. Charles Foulkes, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said in a recent speech that enemy bombers would have to be intercepted beyond the settled parts of Canada to avoid the effects of radioactive fall-out on Canadian cities.

Officials say that to accomplish this more radar, the supersonic CF-105 jet fighter and ground-to-air led missiles will have to be introduced into the air defence system. Introduction of more radar and the CF-105 equipped with atomic-head guided missiles will come about the same time.

Anti-aircraft missiles are not expected to arrive on the Canadian scene until around 1960. They will supplement but not replace fighter planes. They will have a range of 200 to 300 miles and be capable of carrying atomic warheads.

Rocket Can't Understand Drawl, Taxi Radios Delay Arctic Tests

By RICHARD ANCO
Canadian Press Staff Writer

FORT CHURCHILL, Man. (CP)—Some southern drawl bounced into the northern tundra Tuesday, forcing postponement of a rocket experiment.

An American-built 26-foot air force Aerobee was to have been fired from a 120-foot-high tower 12 miles east of this northern Manitoba base. But radio interference from taxi cabs, airfields and military and scientific installations in the southern United States upset the schedule.

American scientists and military experts here indicated the first high-altitude rocket to be launched in Canada now will probably be shot into the atmosphere at night instead of daytime, to avoid the interference with sensitive radio instruments employed in the experiment.

DISRUPT EQUIPMENT

U.S. Army signal corps operators have picked up radio messages from taxi cabs in Fort Bragg, N.C., air force bases in Florida and the White Sands, N.M., rocket proving grounds. These are interfering with radio frequencies used at this American-built launching base.

The firing, originally set for Tuesday, was postponed until today because the stray radio signals disrupted scientific equipment. Radio technicians were studying the possibility that radio interference from the south might be less at night, in which case the launching would be carried out during hours of darkness.

Officials set 11 p.m. (9 p.m. Victoria time) as a possible hour for the firing.

Electronics experts Bill Cruickshank and Harold Zancanata, both of Aberdeen, N.D., said radio beams were reaching this far north base by bouncing off the ionosphere, an area of gas more than 50 miles above the earth.

TWO-WAY AFFAIR

The radio interference appeared to be a two-way affair. Officials said White Sands had earlier complained of radio interference thought to be from Fort Churchill. Weather conditions were favorable for rocket firing. Skies were clear and sunny. Temperatures were expected to be about 20 above zero.

Instruments packed into the nose of the rocket will measure upper air density, temperature and winds and transmit the data to ground observers by radio.

The Aerobee is the first of eight rockets which will be shot off here in the next five weeks. They are a preliminary testing stage of the United States' rocket exploration program of the International Geophysical Year which will extend from next July to December, 1958.

A second rocket, a smaller 14-foot Cajun, is scheduled to be launched Friday. It is a two-stage missile designed to leave a 23-foot platform on a three-second booster explosion, coast for 15 seconds and then shoot higher when the rocket fuel ignites. Height of this projectile will be about 120 miles above the earth.

Bringing Up Baby

HINTS COLLECTED BY Mrs. Dan Gerber
(MOTHER OF 2)

Variations on a theme. Snipping baby's fingernails sometimes presents a bit of a problem since infants usually keep their little fists tightly clenched. Two mothers suggest these solutions:

1. Snip 'em directly after a feeding when baby is drowsy, his fingers relaxed. Run baby's fingernails through a bit of baby powder to outline snipping area.

2. For a sit-up baby, place baby on your lap in front of a mirror. Self-reflected glory is absorbing.

Coos of approval are usually the case when you offer baby Gerber Strained Bananas. That's because they have a natural banana flavor, a delicate appealing color and a dreamy, creamy-smooth texture.

Doctors specify fully ripe banana as an early food not only because babies like the taste, but because they provide energy-giving carbohydrates in easy-to-digest form. Only fully ripe fruit is used—and ripening is controlled for uniformity.

Knit-note. When buying sweaters for baby choose tight weaves. They're less likely to snag; won't catch on baby's fingernails; hold their shape better.

Shining idea dept. If baby's nursing bottles acquire a cloudy look, a tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice added to the sterilizing water will restore original sparkle.

Christmas cue for you-know-who. Not a bit too soon to order a GERBER BABY DOLL for your darling. It's a $3.75 VALUE for only $2.00 and six Gerber labels or cereal box tops. This charming 12 inch replica of the Gerber Baby drinks, wets, sits up—has movable arms and legs. Soft vinyl head and rubber body makes it completely safe. Comes with play accessories. For your Gerber Baby Doll, mail money and labels to Gerber Baby Foods, Department D, Box 4027, Terminal A, Toronto, Ontario. Offer good only in Canada. Expires May 31, 1957.

Billy McNeil Leaves Flyers To Join Wings

EDMONTON, Alta. (BUP)—Right-winger Billy McNeil leaves the Edmonton Flyers today to join the injury-riddled parent Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League. The 20-year-old forward scored one goal last night as the Flyers defeated New Westminster 5-1 in a Western League game.

McNeil, a native of Edmonton, scored 19 goals and earned 31 assists in 68 games with Edmonton last season for a total of 50 points. The Red Wings have sent the Flyers 22-year-old Murray Costello, an all-round forward from South Porcupine, Ont., who was obtained from the Boston Bruins last season.

Andy sends a complete, 15-volume set of Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia to Linda Bonnar, age 11, of Ottawa, Ont., for her question:

What Is Smog?
In peassoup smog or choke a big city like Los Angeles.

Andy sends a Hammond Ambassador World Atlas to Chris Junior Moon, age 13, of Arlington, South Dakota, for his question:

What nationality was Columbus?
His father was a weaver of woolen cloth. They lived on the crooked Street of the Black Cat in Genoa. Their family name was Columbo and the young son born in 1451 was called Christoforo—an Italian name for an Italian boy. Yes, the most daring of all sailors was an Italian of the port of Genoa.

Many Genoese in those days went to settle in Portugal. Young Christoforo was one of them. For years he sailed under the Portuguese flag, planning and dreaming of his famous voyage. But Portugal was not interested in his daring plans. Columbus could speak Spanish as well as Portuguese and his native Italian. So he took his great idea to Spain and spent years waiting and persuading at the court.

On April 3, 1492, his three little ships set forth from Palos harbor across uncharted seas. On Oct. 12 of that year, Columbus set foot in the New World. To pay our respects, and perhaps in hopes of adopting him, the English-speaking peoples call him Christopher Columbus. But the great Columbus was really an Italian of Genoa.

Smog is really a dirt-laden cloud. The cloud is sitting on the ground. When this happens, we call it a fog or mist. This fog is the basic ingredient of smog. The word smog is coined from two words—fog and smoke. However, the dirt in the smog is not necessarily particles of smoke.

The fog, of course, is caused by air temperature. Air is always thirsty. Dry air always drinks up as much moisture as it possibly can. Water is always being evaporated from the surface of the sea, from rivers, streams, puddles and lines of wet laundry. This evaporated moisture becomes vapor, which is a gas. It is invisible and floats off with the other gases in the air.

Warm air can hold more water than cool air. The smiling sun heats the ground and the ground heats the air above it. This warm air takes up all the vapor it can hold. Then the sun is hidden or along comes a chilly wind. The air is cooled off. This cooler air now has more than its quota of vapor. This must be unloaded. The extra water collects in tiny water droplets—small enough to float in the air. They form a mist—a cloud aloft in the air or a fog sitting on the ground.

Fine dust and dirt in the air is trapped among tiny droplets of water. The dirt sticks to the moisture and the clear droplets of water become grubby and grimy. The clean white mist becomes a blanket of smog. They may come from automobile exhaust gases or from the chimneys of factories and refineries. In any case, if most of the impurities are removed from the air, fog cannot turn into grimy, choking smog.

There is never smog over the clean oceans. The smog regions are around big cities and busy industrial areas. Household chimneys add a certain amount of smog-making smoke particles to the air, but not enough to blind a big city like London.

READY FOR ADOPTION:

Very active and fun-loving describes Teddy, a black Cocker Spaniel type. He's happy with kids, likes adults, too, and at seven months is at the ideal adoption age—just growing out of puppyhood.

Patsy is almost entirely spaniel, quite small, a spayed female, two years old, very friendly and anxious to please. Wouldn't mind a city home... doesn't need too much room to run.

Taffy carries his years lightly. He's all of nine, but doesn't look it—in excellent physical condition, mentally very alert. A real pity his former people could no longer provide a home for him. But some lucky household now has a chance to acquire a mature and lovable companion.

AA (Oscar Class) A (Don't Miss) BB (Worthwhile) B (If You Have Time) C (To Put in Time)

(OSCAR CLASS) "PATTERNS" (Odeon)—Rod Serling who set TV viewers on their ear 18 months ago with his blistering original play on big-business, "Patterns," has translated his small screen work to the big screen of the motion picture theatre not only without loss (as is often the case) but with gain.

Nonetheless, here is the rub. "Patterns," just as good if not better than "Executive Suite," also a play about power politics in the boardroom, which won Academy Award mention a couple of years back, is being shown as the second picture on a double bill for a three-day run.

Once again there is proof that the movie moguls are crazy to pick up a TV play, no matter how excellent, and add to it and produce it as a feature film. In the minds of TV viewers it can never be anything more than warmed up visuals.

THE BRILLIANCE of Serling's pen is carried with matching sparkle by Van Heflin and members of "Patterns" original TV cast, Everett Sloane and Ed Begley.

Fish-eyed calculating, financial wizard Sloane brings Heflin from his little gray home in the west into the intrigue-filled conference rooms of head office. It is obvious to all but Heflin that he is to replace Begley, the firm's tiring 62-year-old vice-president who believes that people have souls and should be treated accordingly.

Serling's brilliant characterizations of people as such, and not little tin gods, adds pith and excitement to "Patterns." Even when Heflin awakes to the fact that Sloane is trying to goad Begley into resigning so that he can take his place, he tramples down his conscience because he wants the job.

What a pity that this should have had to happen to such an outstanding film. In another era they would have lined up for blocks to see it.

Braden's Son
Plays Lead Role
In British Film
LONDON (CP)—Thirteen-year-old Christopher Braden has just completed a leading role in a film in which his Canadian-born father has a mere bit part.

The movie, called "Highland Trail," was shot in Scotland, and required young Christopher to do a lot of pony-tracking. In a gymkhana, he had to jump a clear round with a show horse.

His father, TV comedian Bernard Braden, and his mother, Barbara Kelly, both from Vancouver, have made a success in Britain's entertainment world.

ORIGINAL CANADIAN COMEDY, 'O'BRIEN,' ON C-2 AT 10

The TROUBLE WITH KITTY—Kitty writes for the Times, is blonde, young, pretty, and as modern as Mr. Presley's Hound Dog. Trouble with Kitty is, she's wanted to know. Kitty, of course, was referring to Monday night's 90-minute adaptation of Somerset Maugham's tale, "The Letter."

"Excellent," we replied. "A top-notch TV drama."

"But it wasn't like the book," she protested vigorously. "What's the use of adapting a story if you don't follow the original plot?"

"They made a pretty good fist of it though. Darned good theatre, if you ask me."

Kitty shook her head. "They changed the ending. They made Leslie Crosbie pay for her crime. Maugham let her go."

"There's a code about these things," we assured her. "It's just like in motion pictures—they've got to show that crime doesn't pay."

"They didn't in the book."

"But this is a play, Kitty."

"You mean for the good of the young?"

"Something like that."

"But it's not telling the truth, is it?"

"No."

"It's not facing up to reality."

"No."

"Did it improve the story?"

"No."

"Did it harm the story?"

"Well," she replied, obviously satisfied that her point had been won, "it's a poor show when they can't give us credit for being able to discriminate between bad and good."

WHICH GLASS OF BEER IS BIGGER?

PRICE BOOST OPPOSED

Dime Beer Faces Cut in Quantity

The price may remain, but the quantity won't be the same. This is the warning flashed to those who favor a dime glass of beer in B.C. pubs, following a closed session of the B.C. Hotels Association annual convention at Vancouver Tuesday.

Hotel operators say they are faced with rising costs, and something must be done about the price of beer. Two courses have been suggested: A reduction in size of the present 7½-ounce glass to seven ounces, keeping the price at 10 cents; Or an increase in the price per glass.

Reports are that most operators favor retaining the dime price, reducing size of the glass. B.C. Hotel Association president

Oscar Matson, Penticton, said "we still want the 10-cent glass of beer."

Vancouver hotelman Mike Kohut expressed preference for a larger glass and a price increase.

Any recommendations on price increase or glass size will have to be approved by the full membership of the association, then forwarded as a recommendation to the provincial government for possible action.

Sewers Flooded By Torrential Vancouver Rain

VANCOUVER (CP)—Extra city sewer department crews were out early today as torrential rains dumped almost an inch of water on the Lower Mainland overnight. Worried residents of Fairmont Avenue in North Vancouver asked for a bulldozer to remove huge boulders tumbled down by rapidly rising Mosquito Creek.

Foodless a Week Canadians Safe In Small Ketch

ROTTERDAM (Reuters)—Two young Canadian adventurers, sighted in their storm-battered ketch Orenda in the Atlantic five days ago after they were given up for lost, went for almost a week without tasting solid food, it was learned here today.

Leonidas Angelides, Greek-born captain of the Liberian steamer Mariblanca, today told how the starved, exhausted sailors turned down his offer to bring them to safety. Angelides, who arrived here today, said the Orenda was spotted from his ship because a sharp lookout had been ordered for survivors or wreckage of the United States Air Force Littermaster reported lost in the area.

CAME ABOARD

The Mariblanca hove to in rough seas, the ketch came alongside, the two sailors—Bert Smith, 31, of Toronto, and Alan Battersby, 29, formerly of Blackpool, England,—stumbled aboard the steamer, muttering: "Thank God, captain, God is good."

The 27-foot Orenda sailed for Europe from North Sydney, N.S., on Sept. 1. The tiny ketch was sighted in mid-Atlantic Sept. 22 by the United States liner America.

The America circled the ketch for 40 minutes, but saw no sign of life aboard and it was feared the boat was derelict. Relatives of Smith and Battersby were informed that the men were considered lost at sea.

Today, Angelides said the men were tired and wet, but in fairly good condition when he spoke to them last Saturday. He said Battersby had a slight rash.

Fourth False Bomb Report Recorded Here

Fourth bomb hoax in Victoria this year spurred quiet search of the Plaza Theatre Tuesday at 4:35 p.m., but police detectives found no bomb or threat of danger.

It was the second time an anonymous phone call sent police on a search of the Plaza since April.

The call was received by police, who reported the caller, sounding like a teen-aged boy, said, "There's a bomb in the Plaza Theatre"—then hung up.

NO EVACUATION

Theatre management decided against evacuating the premises, but aided in a search as a precaution.

Patrons were cleared of the Plaza April 4 and the Odeon was evacuated Sept. 26 when similar calls were received. On Sept. 10, Trans-Canada Airlines management got a prankster's call saying a bomb had been planted in a Vancouver-bound airliner at Patricia Bay airport.

60,000 AT SEATTLE

Ike Didn't Miss A Trick on Tour

SEATTLE (AP)—President Eisenhower came West Tuesday on his biggest vote hunt of the campaign—and got an enthusiastic reception along the way.

The biggest crowd—and the most enthusiasm—came at St. Paul and Minneapolis, where Eisenhower stopped off for a couple of noon speeches. And he had a fair-sized crowd to greet him here at Seattle, even though he didn't arrive until 5:35 p.m.

In addition to trying to pick up some electoral votes for himself on this trip, Eisenhower obviously hopes to help some local candidates such as Republican Governor Arthur B. Langlie.

The governor, in a red-hot race trying to win Democrat Warren Magnuson's seat, was at the airport to greet Eisenhower. So was Edgar Eisenhower, the President's brother, who lives in Tacoma, Wash., and at whose home he will spend tonight.

There were gaps in the crowd Tuesday night on the four-mile trip in from the airport, but Eisenhower didn't miss a trick. Every time he came to a cluster of potential voters, he was on his feet, waving his hat.

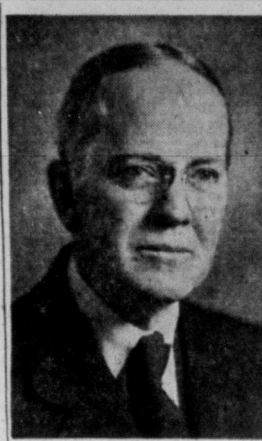

When he hit downtown Seattle, business picked up and Eisenhower stayed on his feet, waving. Police Captain Jack Porter estimated 60,000 persons watched as the President traveled from the airport to his hotel.

Eisenhower campaigned hard Tuesday and went to bed early last night—"tired but happy" as his press secretary, James C. Hagerty, put it. Today—the second day of a five-day tour into five states—the president's staff kept his schedule clear of engagements to give him time to work on tonight's speech in Civic Auditorium and those he will make the rest of the week in Oregon, California and Colorado.

Yesterday, in the Minneapolis and St. Paul areas, Eisenhower rode about 30 miles in an open car and he stood, waving to the crowds, just about all the way. He did the same on the ride from the airport here.

In Tacoma tomorrow, Eisenhower will make a mid-day talk at a rally at the College of Puget Sound, then fly on to Portland, Ore., for a major nationwide television address there in the evening.

President Eisenhower's Seattle address tonight will be carried by television channels 5, 11 and 12, commencing at 8.

Dewey Says Ban National Suicide; Ike Plans Reply

Compiled from Times News Services

The sharp controversy between the political parties in the United States over banning of H-bomb tests reached a new high today.

Arriving in Seattle overnight to continue his northwest campaigning, President Eisenhower instructed top administration officials to prepare a new reply to Democrat Adlai Stevenson's proposal that efforts be made to halt the tests.

He took this action despite a statement last Thursday he had uttered his "last word" on the Stevenson proposal.

His press secretary, James C. Hagerty, said in Seattle this morning Stevenson made "incorrect statements" in his speech on the subject Monday night and "we are going to set the record straight."

Meanwhile Tuesday night Republicans Thomas Dewey and Richard Nixon declared the Democrats are inviting the United States to "national suicide" with their proposals.

'Whole World Threatened'—Kefauver

On the other side, Estes Kefauver, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, argued that the whole world is threatened by continued nuclear tests. He quoted what he said was scientific opinion that the U.S. has H-bombs of "maximum concussive force to blow the earth off its axis by 16 degrees."

The campaigning by both parties hinged on a statement Monday night by Stevenson, that he would count it the first order of business, if elected, to work for an early halt to the tests.

President Eisenhower, while in Minnesota yesterday on the first leg of a campaign trip to the Pacific coast, took indirect note of Stevenson's proposal, saying his administration has sought persistently to dedicate the atom to mankind's welfare.

Dewey, former governor of New York and twice an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the presidency, in a speech at Flint, Mich., described the Monday night speech as a revised edition of Stevenson's opinion on "how to stop testing the H-bomb and still stay alive." "He has changed it five times now and it still adds up to the same," Dewey added. "It is still an invitation to national disaster."

Vice-President Nixon said in a speech at Buffalo, N.Y., that Stevenson is "incredibly stubborn and naive" on the issue while Eisenhower offers what Nixon described as "experienced... hard-headed realism."

Kefauver, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, gave his views at a press conference in New York City. The Atomic Energy Commission declined to comment immediately on his "axis" statement.

But State Secretary Dulles told a Washington press conference he doubts Stevenson has enough facts to propose any sound plan.

Dulles said the whole problem has been under intensive study by the Eisenhower administration for several years.

Former AEC Member Backs Adlai

Stevenson's headquarters released a telegram from former atomic-energy commissioner Henry de Wolfe Smythe, who told Stevenson: "Your clear and objective statement... is a service to the country transcending the partisanship of the current campaign."

Stevenson, elaborating on his proposal, first broached last April, said there would be little danger to national security in ending nuclear tests because, he said, the U.S. can quickly detect any tests by other powers and would be able to resume the U.S. test program within eight weeks.

At Minneapolis Tuesday President Eisenhower took an indirect swipe at Stevenson, saying that under his administration "we have advanced a long way" toward a lasting peace.

Eisenhower followed his usual custom of not mentioning his Democratic rival by name. But after referring to "the anguished cry of some politicians" and to "anguished politicians," there could be little doubt that he was hitting at Stevenson when he asked:

$1 Judgment Against Sun In Libel Suit

VANCOUVER (CP)—Judgment of $1 was awarded Thomas L. Black, a log broker of New Westminster, in his libel action against The Sun Publishing Company Ltd. He sued for $447,000 damages.

The judgment was issued Tuesday by Mr. Justice J. V. Cline in the British Columbia Supreme Court.

Mr. Black claimed special damages for an unstated general damages for a statement published in The Sun, Oct. 28, 1953. He alleged that the newspaper had seriously harmed him in his reputation in credit.

A sum of $500 paid into court as "sufficient compensation" when its defence was filed was ordered returned to The Sun, which was also given costs against the plaintiff from the time the money was paid into court.

Winnipeg Policeman Held for Extortion

WINNIPEG (CP)—A Winnipeg policeman with more than 10 years' service today was charged with extortion following his arrest in the Fort Rouge district Tuesday night after a chase in which pursuing detectives fired three warning shots.

Const. Daniel McCure, 32, was remanded without plea until Oct. 25 and released on $20,000 bail. Inspector of detectives James Toal said that on Oct. 4 a middle-aged Fort Rouge man received an anonymous telephone call saying he could avoid publicity of a recent court case in which he was involved by paying an unspecified amount of money. When he replied he did not have that kind of money, the caller allegedly told him to get it and he would be called later.

Two detectives waited near the scene at the appointed time. They said a man picked up the parcel. McCure was arrested after the case. He has been police store-keeper for four years.

Inspector Toal requested that the name of the victim in the case be withheld.

Stabs Wife To Death

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP)—A husky ex-Marine who said he had the "urge to kill" stabbed and hacked his pregnant wife and two children to death today.

Detective Lieut. Earl Newberry said James G. Burnmeister, 28, related to him:

His nine-months-old baby, Marilyn, cried sometime after 5 a.m., and awakened him and his wife, Mary, 32.

"I suddenly had the urge to kill them all." He took a knife with a six-inch blade, jammed it in his wife's back while she still held the baby. Burnmeister then turned to his three-year-old son, James, Jr., and hacked him to death. He then stabbed the little girl.

Queen Starts Britain's First Atomic Electricity

CALDER HALL, England (UP)—Queen Elizabeth pulled a switch today that sent electricity coursing throughout Britain from the world's first full-sized atomic power plant.

The ceremony unleashed a force of 12,000 volts into nationwide transmission lines from nuclear-powered generators that eventually will produce almost 100,000 kilowatts.

A few dozen tons of uranium per year began doing the work of 56 tons of coal an hour at the pioneer Calder Hall electricity plant of the British Atomic Energy Authority.

Residual Effects of Tally-Ho, Hens, Rabbits Worry Health Bd.

More restrictive regulations governing operation of tally-hos and keeping of poultry and rabbits in urban areas were recommended Tuesday by Victoria-Esquamalt Union Board of Health.

The board recommended that the city either undertake to sweep tally-ho routes three times a day, including Saturdays and Sundays, or require the tally-ho operators to be responsible for this service as a term of licensing.

At the same time, councils of Esquimalt and Victoria will be asked to amend present poultry by-laws to permit inspectors to clamp down on persons who keep chickens or rabbits in an unsatisfactory manner. Sanitary inspector Elwood Gropp asked first for a total ban on keeping poultry or rabbits in the city but was opposed by Richard Reeve, school board representative on the board.

Mr. Gropp also suggested a $5 inspection fee. It was decided, however, to merely ask councils to enforce higher standards of cleanliness. Mr. Gropp is to bring in suggested regulations. It was felt by some members that to keep chickens properly fed and housed at today's costs would make a small city poultry operation unprofitable.

The health board made it clear no objection was being taken to tally-hos despite earlier announcements that the board would discuss curtailment of the tourist attraction because of manure littering city streets.

Mr. Gropp said there have been many complaints about the manure on the street and said after the meeting that although health authorities opposed a total ban such action had been discussed.

Natural Gas for Valley Towns By November; Chilliwack to Wait

(CP and BUP Dispatches) Chilliwack—Sumas, Matsqui and Abbotsford will get natural gas the first week in November, but Chilliwack will have to wait the outcome of its Supreme Court appeal. Dr. Harry L. Purdy of B.C. Electric said here Tuesday. Dr. Purdy is executive vice-president of B.C. Electric.

Speaking in support of the B.C. Electric's franchise in the Fraser Valley, Dr. Purdy said: "We have a gas business experience, the ability to raise large sums of money and the added advantage of economies through unified operation."

Surrey, Chilliwack City and Chilliwack Township councils are appealing the Public Utilities Commission's granting of the B.C. Electric franchise.

PARK MONEY REFUSED VANCOUVER—City council turned down a park board request Tuesday for a $5,000,000 by-law for purchase and development of new parks, playgrounds and golf courses.

The council, in turning down the request, agreed that Vancouver needs more parks, but added that the city urgently needs new sewers, schools and traffic control.

GAS LEAK EXPLODES VANCOUVER—A workman suffered burns to the hands Tuesday night when gas fumes leaking from the main he was working on exploded, shooting flames eight feet in the air. Treated and later released from hospital was 32-year-old Dominic Busto, a welder for B.C. Electric Co. Company. Crews shut off gas pressure and the flames soon died out.

DISCUSS AIRPORT SALE VANCOUVER—Talks that began at the city hall today will soon bring a city council decision on whether to hold a December plebiscite on selling the airport.

The special committee, headed by Ald. Halford Wilson, met privately to hear a departmental report on the estimated value of the city's international airport.

TWO-ALARM FIRE VANCOUVER—A two-alarm fire that broke out in the Vancouver Tile Company, Ltd., on Main Street, early today, caused heavy damage as it spread to two adjoining business premises.

The blaze spread to the Main Spot Coffee Shop and the D. & H. Products, on either side of the premises. The fire raged out of control for nearly an hour and was brought under control at 6:52 a.m. after a second alarm had called out off-shift firemen.

40-HOUR WEEK URGED KELOWNA—Province-wide establishment of the 40-hour work week as a maximum was urged at the South Okanagan

STUDY OF OFFICE AUTOMATION MAY BRING EDUCATION CHANGES

VANCOUVER (CP)—Tom Alsbury, vice-president of the Vancouver Trades and Labor Council, is conducting a survey into automation in office work which some observers say may mean "sweeping changes in the province's commercial education system."

Mr. Alsbury, who is also a school principal here, said the special survey is "urgent" because automation "is beginning to take over" everywhere.

Mollet Staking All On Suez Crisis Vote

PARIS (AP)—Premier Guy Mollet was authorized today to stake the life of his Socialist-led cabinet in a National Assembly debate on his Suez Canal policy and other vital issues.

The decision to demand a vote of confidence was taken at a cabinet meeting presided over by President Rene Coty. Defeat would mean resignation of Mollet and his ministers. But this is not considered likely.

The debate began Tuesday with several broadsides against the Mollet government over the Suez issue. Before it adjourned for its summer recess, the assembly had given Mollet a carte blanche for firm action against Egypt's President Nasser for nationalizing the canal July 26.

ALGERIA DEBATE

Although the Mollet government has since pressed for international management of the waterway, these efforts so far have been fruitless.

Prime Minister Eden and Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd had a surprise conference with Mollet and Foreign Minister Pineau here Tuesday night. They wound up asking Egypt again to put forth a plan for operation of the canal that

Nixon Sports Democratic Trade Mark

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UP)—Vice-President Richard Nixon, to his embarrassment, has developed a Stevenson-style hole in his left shoe.

Adlai Stevenson was photographed in 1952 with a hole in his sole. The picture was nationally printed and this year the Democrats made it a political trademark.

Nixon, who brought along only one pair of black shoes on this flying campaign trip, had phoned ahead for a new pair of his hard-to-buy size 11E shoes. But it was too late. A sharp-eyed photographer spotted the hole.

It was a little embarrassing, because the Republicans have countered the Democrat hole-in-the-shoe trademark by reprinting it on posters with the slogan: "Don't let this happen to you—vote Republican!"

Atlantic Plane Hunt Reduced

LONDON (Reuters)—United States Air Force Skymaster carried on a limited search today for a Liftmaster which disappeared into the Atlantic Ocean with 59 men aboard last Wednesday night.

But the general air search, covering 2,000,000 square miles of ocean, ended at midnight. Air force officers said it may have been the largest peace-time air search ever conducted over the Atlantic.

Airplanes from the United States, England, France and Portugal aided in the hunt.

The air force said today a small pillow with a plastic bag had been found in the Atlantic near the spot where the wheels and a dinghy had been picked up earlier.

Meanwhile, there was an indication that the plane may have been damaged by fire before it disappeared. Plane wheels found were charred, apparently by fire.

YUGOSLAVIA MIFFED BY IKE'S STATEMENTS

BELGRADE (Reuters)—Yugoslavia announced today that certain statements made by President Eisenhower on American aid for President Tito's government are "unacceptable."

At the same time, Yugoslavia revealed it has offered to purchase American agricultural surpluses under long-term credits repayable in dollars or corresponding currency instead of the present year-to-year aid system.

Tito's views were contained in a statement giving "first impressions" on Eisenhower's letter to Congress Monday which recommended continuing economic aid to Yugoslavia but holding back of heavy military supplies including 200 jet planes.

Oh, the baby is wonderful—but I'm running out of clothes drying room!

But Helen, that's why automatic dryers were invented!

Wash and dry every day if need be. Electricity does these household chores for you automatically. An automatic dryer dries a mountain of wash in just about the time it used to take you to hang it out. You'll be amazed how little electricity it uses—approximately a nickel's worth for each load.

Divers to Hunt Doria Log-Books If Swedes, Italians Agree on Costs

NEW YORK (AP)—A lawyer for the Italian Line has offered to send divers down to the sunken log-books.

Andrea Doria to search for her log-books if the Swedish American Line will share the cost 50-50.

But counsel for the Swedish

American Line says it is up to the Italian Line to produce the books.

The offer was made Tuesday at a pre-trial federal hearing into the July 25 collision between the Doria and the liner Stockholm. The collision cost 50 lives and sent the Doria to the bottom off Nantucket Island, Mass.

Repeaters to amplify the signals are tied into the new trans-Atlantic telephone cable every 40 nautical miles.

The Secrets of Suez

HOWEVER THE SUEZ DISPUTE is finally settled, the complex, secret story behind it probably will not be known to the world public for a long time. Meanwhile a disturbing sidelight is revealed from Ottawa, by the dean of our political correspondents, Mr. Grant Dexter. This reliable reporter has discovered, through the Canadian Government, that Mr. Dulles has been playing a strange game with the United States' friends in Britain and Europe.

It will be recalled that a Western mission, headed by Prime Minister Menzies of Australia, went to Cairo a few weeks ago, discussed the Suez issue with Mr. Nasser and achieved no results. What the world public has never been told, until Mr. Dexter dug up the facts, is the sequel of the Cairo conference.

The Menzies mission having failed, Britain and France decided to submit the dispute immediately to the United Nations. This was to be expected, but for some curious reason Britain and France made no announcement of their intentions and were strongly attacked for refusing to seek United Nations intervention.

The secret fact revealed by Mr. Dexter is that Mr. Dulles intervened at that point and urged his allies to avoid the United Nations. Instead, he produced his doubtful scheme for a canal users' association. Reluctantly Britain and France accepted it to avoid a breach with the United States.

What were the motives of Mr. Dulles' devious strategy? Ottawa, says Mr. Dexter, does not yet know the answer to that question. "It is assumed," he writes, "that Mr. Dulles wished to keep a free hand. At the United Nations he almost certainly would have been confronted by a resolution he would have been compelled to support. Perhaps he was thinking of the presidential election and the danger of a war scare weakening the electoral appeal of the Republican Party."

At all events, after Britain and France had abandoned their appeal to the United Nations and embraced the canal users' project, they began, Mr. Dexter reports, to notice "a depressing duality in Mr. Dulles' statements. When he talked abroad, the proposed users' organization fairly bristled with teeth. When he talked at home he unfailingly explained that what he had said abroad did not mean anything. . . . In the end, the United Kingdom and France realized that they were the chief victims of Mr. Dulles' diplomacy. They ceased to rely on him and reverted to their original policy of going to the United Nations. No charges of bad faith have been publicly made and the semblance of the reality of western unity has been maintained."

The first effect of Mr. Dulles' tortured diplomacy was to place Britain and France in a false position before the world. They appeared to be bent only on the use of force and unwilling to submit their grievances to the United Nations as they were obligated to do by the Charter. This misunderstanding damaged them among their friends, including the public of the United States.

But the more important and regrettable result is an undoubted cleavage between the Western allies, and a grave loss of confidence in Mr. Dulles among the governments and peoples of Britain and France. (The same thing, obviously, is true of the Canadian Government.)

Whatever the outcome of the present United Nations debate and the private conversations behind it may be, the Russians can chalk up another important political victory in their perpetual campaign to divide the West.

British Labor Moving Left

WHEN MR. ANEURIN BEVAN returned to high office in Britain's Labor Party through his election as treasurer this month, it was apparent that a strong element of Trades Union support had swung behind him.

Without backing from an important faction of the TUC, Mr. Bevan would have remained in the political twilight. He was pushed into that relative obscurity by the trades unions when he made his bid against Mr. Hugh Gaitskell for party leadership on Clement Attlee's retirement. He presumably would have remained there had the TUC preserved the character it then showed.

The re-emergence of Nye Bevan is one of two correlated developments in this year's Labor Party Congress. The other is the vigorous leftism of Mr. Frank Cousins, new leader of the Transport and General Workers Union.

That union was formerly a staunch right-wing element within the party. Under Mr. Cousins' leadership it appears to be backing a drive for more militant socialism. And that seems to be the present mood of the Labor Party—in sharp contrast to the moderation of recent years.

This is the attitude of Britain's socialists who look confidently ahead to restored prestige among the voters. They are politically optimistic because the Suez problem, difficulties in the automobile industry and current economic issues have brought the Conservative Government into deep trouble. Labor is closing its ranks, presumably with an eye on the next elections.

If there are those in the British Labor movement who look a little cynically to a future in which Nye Bevan will resume his efforts to seek party leadership, the majority seems inclined to turn left along the avenue he follows. This could, of course, be political expediency.

The trend is of particular interest in Canada in view of the CCF's Winnipeg gesture easing away from militant socialism. If the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation is the spiritual child of British Labor, it seems to have lost close touch with the feelings of the parent.

Not a Practicable Plan

THE QUESTION OF ROYAL RESIDENCE in Canada, raised anew in London dispatches, is not likely to stir wide interest in this country. Canadians will take second place to none in loyalty to the Throne and the institution of monarchy. But by historic national custom, and by individual nature, they are much less likely to view with eagerness the situation suggested by the removal of a royal court to Ottawa.

This reluctance, eminently respectable as it is, does not arise from any financial consideration, formidable though this might prove to be. It is rooted rather in the Canadian tradition which engendered almost unanimous approval of the abolition of titles in this country.

Canadians may not readily admit it, but few will claim that Ottawa is a large enough city to sustain a royal court. A Buckingham Palace on the banks of the Ottawa River would appear to be an enormously top-heavy structure for a community which has yet to achieve metropolitan stature.

The hard fact is that while the value of the monarchy wins increasing recognition in these troubled days, the machinery of the Throne would not prove adaptable to our North American environment. Three hundred years of striving toward our own peculiar form of loyal independence, three hundred years of struggle with what even now is largely a frontier economy and society, have served to preserve steadfastly the spirit of the monarchy, but equally have failed to fashion the setting for a royal residence.

The whole question, of course, is largely academic. The obstacles, both constitutional and practical, which would arise in the United Kingdom through such a step, would alone relegate the idea to the realm of supposition. But even before these could be felt, the feelings of the people of Britain, to say nothing of those of the principals involved, would doom any plan for "part-time monarchy" to oblivion.

How to Help the Symphony

THE INTERMUNICIPAL COMMITTEE has recommended a course to Greater Victoria municipalities which will enable them to make grants to the Victoria Symphony Society.

The committee suggests that Oak Bay, Esquimalt, Saanich and Central Saanich follow the procedure adopted by the city this year. The city included funds for a donation in its annual budget and then sought and received approval for the grant from the Provincial Government.

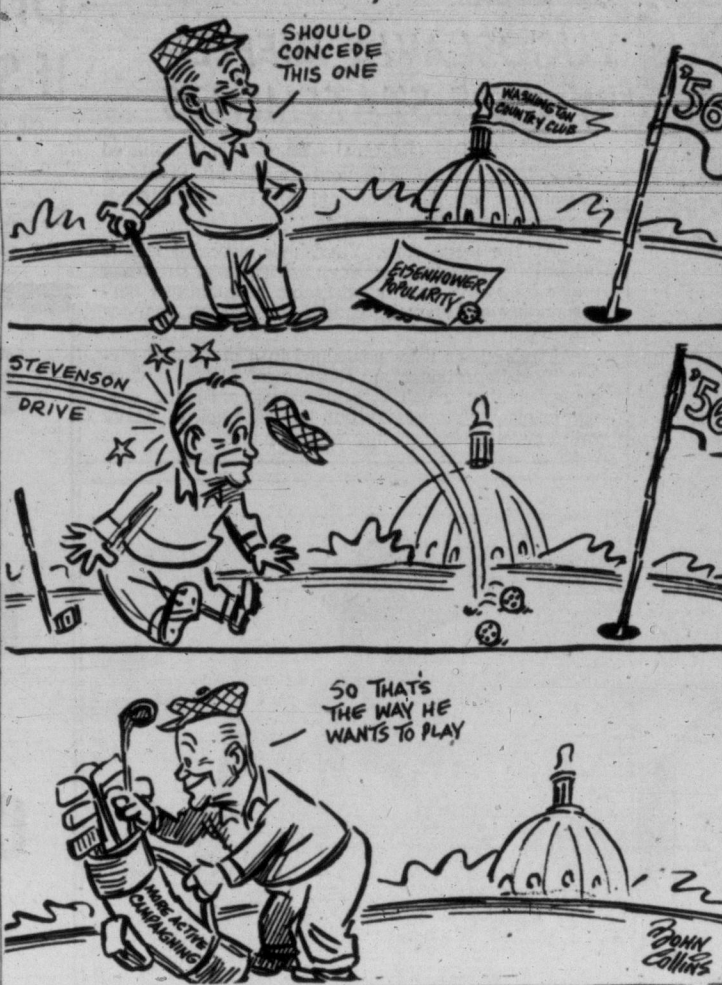

Oak Bay, professing support for the society, believed itself unable to make such a grant—although there appeared to be means by which a contribution could have been made.

The intermunicipal committee's proposal removes any impediment to assistance next year. If the municipalities honestly wish to assist the symphony—feeling that it is an organization of high value to the whole community—they can help.

Both the city and the committee have pointed the way. There should be no occasion in 1957 for expressions of regret over legal limitations which presumably prevent municipalities from making contributions.

He'll Have to Play This One Out

IT'S JUST TOO TOO

By B. A. TOBIN

The Mindoro Mind

TENACITY is a highly regarded human attribute. The never-say-die spirit, the bulldog determination to hang on, are widely admired, and rightly so. But for all its strength and burly nature, tenacity is a delicate attribute. For a while it is fine. But at some indefinable point it suddenly becomes stupid. And if it persists in it it rapidly becomes laughable. Like humor, which can drop dead with hardly a yawn of warning, the old bulldog quality can outlive its audience with bewildering speed.

Thus, reading that news item yesterday about the Japanese on Mindoro Island, in the Philippines, you get a much different reaction from what might be expected.

The fact is that fifty Japanese soldiers, led by a captain, are still fighting the Second World War on Mindoro. They've been living in the jungle, killing birds and animals for food, and getting on as best they could for the last ten years. Now and then, I suppose, they saw the enemy in the distance but, lacking ammunition, they kept safely out of range.

Doubting Thomases

In any case, the astounding thing is that they are still there, and only now have they agreed to negotiate with the Americans and receive a Japanese Government official who will try to persuade them that the war is over.

Now that surely is a rousing example of loyalty to a cause, of service to the Emperor, of stalwart last-ditch soldiering. But for the life of me I can't raise any admiration for it.

At best I feel incredulity that a group of men could prove so stupid. At worst, they appear laughable clowns who have stayed on the stage too long.

One of the unfortunate results of trying too hard too long is that you may achieve the exact opposite of what you wanted to do. Those last-standers on Mindoro could conceivably create trouble for Japan by firing on Japan's present allies, instead of, as they think, defending their country.

Excessive Zeal

A sad example of this principle was the Catholic girl who was keeping company with a Presbyterian lad. The girl's parents gave their consent to marriage if the boy would become a Catholic. He agreed and began to take instruction in the faith.

Everything seemed to be going well, and the girl continued to encourage the lad. But a week before the wedding she came home in tears.

"What's the matter?" asked her mother.

"The wedding's all off," sobbed the girl.

"Whatever happened?" asked the mother.

"I tried too hard," sobbed the girl. "I over-sold him. Now he wants to be a priest."

But many a real instance is common. The flight-of-time, the salesman who forgets the flight of time, the customer who fights off his customer's efforts to close the deal because he wants to give his sales talk regardless of need, the guest who kills all hopes of a return bout because he gets a death grip on the easy chair—these folks all suffer from the Mindoro spirit.

Waiting Game

Sometimes, of course, it isn't the victim's fault. Mere force of circumstances may make you overly tenacious. You'll remember that little poem:

Under the spreading mistletoe
The homely maiden stood,
And stood, and stood, and stood,
And stood, and stood . . .

The copy books used to tell the story of the little boy who was told by his father one morning to wait, on London Bridge until he returned in a short while. The boy waited and waited, but the father didn't show up. Lunch time came and went. The boy stuck to his post, watching each passerby for the familiar face.

The afternoon passed—still no father. Night fell and the boy continued to wait. Finally around midnight the father turned up. He had become involved in his business affairs and had completely forgotten the boy.

The case was cited as an example of obedience and steadfastness and we were told to admire it. But I always had a hunch that the lad wasn't too bright.

His behaviour may have been okay back in the nineties, when this presumption occurred. But it seemed to me—and most of my classmates—that the lad might have shown a little more gumption and solved his problem other than by emulating a post.

I can't help but feel that he would have fared better with the boys on Mindoro.

Now, one of the types most likely to stumble into the pitfall of not knowing when to quit is the columnist. So . . .

Oct. 17, 1916—The Blue Cross has forwarded to headquarters $100 collected by the dogs Prince and Miss Bumps for August. Three parcels of goods also have been sent. It is the intention to place them on sale.

Price Hurdle to Study

Many students cannot afford to buy American textbooks at their present price, inflated by stupid taxes. As a result, this valuable supplement to higher grade teaching cannot be fully used.

A bookshop assistant confessed that she was ashamed to ask the high prices for medical and engineering textbooks. The B.C. Government can at once remove the sales tax on all books and subsidize the price of textbooks by taxing the sale of TV sets.

Receipts for purchase of textbooks by students would be cashed in, or the books could be income tax deductible.

Delinquency

Did our adult delinquents invent the term juvenile delinquent to make teenagers responsible for almost all the "anti-social" crimes of modern-day society?

We have recently seen newspapers fill front pages with accounts of teenage vandalism, thefts, acts of violence, and so on.

Is this to enable the newspapers' adult delinquents to thrill with sadistic delight, when they see pictures showing juvenile delinquents being led off to prison "to complete their delinquent education?"

And yet, after a while, the juvenile delinquents must return—too often educated in every aspect of "adult" crime. "Adult" not "juvenile" delinquency is our main problem.

Youth and Church

We have had Mr. Rees' expression of regret at "an appalling lack of interest in the church on the part of young people today," and we have had at least two letters hailing such a state of affairs as a proof that our young people have shaken off the shackles of superstition, enlightened of course by modern scientific knowledge.

I would like, if I may, to make a few comments.

In the first place I am inclined to think that Mr. Rees is unduly pessimistic and the charge not altogether deserved. Also that, insofar as it is deserved, the cause is certainly not due "To enlightenment of scientific knowledge," but to several other and quite different things.

In Victorian days children went to church because they were taken there and adolescents continued to go largely because it was very difficult to get out of doing so and because there were no "movies" or television or cars to take them elsewhere or provide them with other occupations. Moreover—and this is perhaps the main reason—in those days there was such a thing as parental authority and neither children nor adolescents were completely free to do exactly what they liked and go where they liked at all times as they certainly are today.

It might possibly be admitted that the old conditions were not altogether satisfactory but it is surely quite obvious that the new regime leaves much to be desired.

As regards the two letters referred to—there is here, as there is no doubt in all other places, a select circle of people who lose no opportunity to attack "the churches" and religion generally.

Personally I would think that public opinion in general is sufficiently healthy, to make it safe and wise to disregard them entirely.

Spelling Economy

The mounting cost of education is a serious problem facing boards of education everywhere. How can these costs be met without breaking the taxpayers' back?

No community can afford to leave its children without an education. However, our communities are faced with the dilemma of the necessary education against the mounting costs of education. We cannot afford to have our school teachers underpaid and unprepared to teach our children.

Properly paid and properly trained teachers will have the inspiration to exert every effort and to explore every avenue to help them educate our children in the shortest possible time. The teachers alone cannot solve this problem. The solution is a matter of co-operation of the general public, the teachers and the educational authorities.

Let members of the community who may have ideas, which might be helpful in the solution of this problem, come forth with the ideas so that the public might discuss them. I am sure, our daily newspapers will be ready to help with such public discussions.

There is one avenue which, if explored, promises to be of help in reducing the costs of education and in holding them at an even keel. This avenue is the adoption of simplified spelling or phonetic spelling.

In Remembrance

Only those who worked and trained with Miss Hilda Leighton during the past years of Guiding in Victoria, realize just what she gave to this movement, and to the children of this city, many of them now with guides of their own.

Receiving her own early training in one of the first Guide companies in England, Miss Leighton devoted most of her life to this movement until her recent retirement, taking Guides to camp year after year, and in later years running the Victoria division.

As one who was privileged with many others to serve as Guide and Commissioner under her, I remember with thankfulness her thorough training and discipline which made Guiding.

It seemed fitting that at the service on Tuesday, the church of St. Mary's, Oak Bay, was decorated for the Harvest Festival, and one's thoughts went to the harvest of Guides in this city and district through the efforts of Miss Leighton.

As her brother, the Rev. John, who took part in the service remarked just before the Guides sang "Taps," "The day is done, but a new day is begun."

In affectionate remembrance from us all.

FROM PHILADELPHIA

By JOSEPH ALSOP

'He Could've Did More'

PHILADELPHIA'S Thirty-Second Ward—one of those Negro sections in the northern big cities which both Democrats and Republicans are now watching with breathless attention—is nowhere as bad as the worst of Harlem and nowhere as good as the best. In this Philadelphia ward there is little to compare with wide areas of slum clearance housing that promise a new decency and hope to the poor in Harlem. There is nothing, either, quite so evil as Harlem's even wider areas of stinking cliff-high slum apartments that are fully as horrible as the worst slums of Bombay. The Thirty-Second Ward is, rather, a classical Negro section in the old style, where the Negroes have taken over street after drab and dreary street built for fairly prosperous white people 70 or 80 years ago.

The more ambitious and successful Negro families live in—often even own—little stone-built row houses that must once have housed a solid middle class family apiece, and today house anywhere up to eight or ten Negro families apiece.

Push your way into these tenements past the children playing on the steps and sidewalk because they have nowhere else to play. Climb the rickety dark stairs. As you pass by, avert your eyes, if you are wise, from the single foul bathroom that serves the two or three families on each floor.

Squalid Castoffs

Knock at the crazy doors. Peer into the crowded rooms, furnished with the squalid castoffs of our industrial civilization, whose products, somehow, do not seem to age very gracefully.

You are gripped—you must be gripped—by a deep shame that this rich country lets so many of its citizens live in such a manner. Even so, even the worse of Philadelphia's Thirty-Second Ward lacks the dark, downright Asian squalor, the foulness and grim hopelessness of the worst of Harlem.

And this difference seems to have considerable political importance, judging by the results of an intensive door-to-door inquiry recently conducted in company with a professional pollster, John Kraft.

On a similar expedition in Harlem, this reporter's partner found that the slum dwellers thought little about civil rights and were voting solidly Democratic simply because "The Democrats are the party of us poor people." In contrast, he also found a passionate preoccupation with civil rights wherever Negro families had achieved more decent living conditions; and in these sections of Harlem there was considerable resentment of Adlai E. Stevenson's "moderation" on the civil rights issue.

In Philadelphia's Thirty-Second Ward,

in contrast, where almost no one can escape from slum conditions but the slums are somewhat less appalling, the economic and civil rights issues are blended in almost everyone's mind. But here in Philadelphia, they seldom mention Adlai Stevenson's "moderation" on the civil rights, instead, they say, "The President could've did more to help our people."

Typical of the more articulate was Mrs. Irene Bennett, a sturdy intelligent woman who works for Wanamakers and is rearing her large brood in part of one floor of a tumbledown house on Camac Street.

Mrs. Bennett is no Stevenson enthusiast, but after careful thought she gives the greatest weight to the President's inaction during the school troubles in the South.

"The deciding factor with me is which party is going to do the most for my people," she says.

More Belligerent

More belligerent, and more representative of the less thoughtful, more directly emotional voters was Miss Celia Cook, a little, white-haired, hard-working old lady who lives in a room like a cave in one of the North 12th St. slums.

"I don't like Republicans," said Miss Cook. "They're for the rich. And I don't like Mr. Eisenhower at all, either. He's done everything for the white people and nothing for my people. Why look at all those troubles down South. Isn't he President? Why can't he do something?" Howard Norris, an ambitious young clerical worker who is buying his own little house on North St., took the exceptional view that "Although Eisenhower has ducked the civil rights issue, I always remember these southern governors are Democrats. So I'm for the Democrats just because I think they're the party of the little man."

But two of the rare Republican voters, ladies of rather obvious easy virtue, said they did not like the President because "It seems like he could've did a lot more for the colored people."

Certainly Erroneous

They then added, with a giggle, that they were Republicans all the same. "Because everyone round here is a Republican."

That notion of the two ladies was certainly erroneous. The vast majority of the voters of the Thirty-Second Ward chose Adlai Stevenson four years ago. The Democratic lead was so decisive that there were few Republicans left to switch; yet we found a couple of switches none-the-less.

Unless our rather large sample was somehow badly distorted, this crucial Negro ward of crucial Philadelphia should give Adlai Stevenson as large a proportional majority as he got four years ago. And if our switches are indicative, he may even gain a percentage point or two on top of that.

Doug Peden OUTDOOR REPORT

Less than a year ago, the idea of a spring hunting season on blue grouse was batted around with considerable vigor during a meeting of the Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association.

The idea was prompted by a belief that our blue grouse population was near a peak and statements by biologists that a spring season, aimed mainly at adult cock birds which normally make up less than five per cent of the annual hunting kill, would not seriously trim the basic supply.

Fortunately the idea, although perhaps biologically sound, was allowed to die a natural death. But we did get an increase in the grouse limit to eight birds per day.

Conditions were excellent during last spring's nesting season. There was an early hatch, brood counts were good and the stage was apparently set for the kind of shooting our fathers used to talk about.

Yet, the season now heading into its final stages will be remembered by many hunters as "the year we couldn't find the blue grouse."

What happened?

Actually the picture is not as gloomy as many would paint it. Some of the veteran scattergunners, wise in the ways of the unpredictable blues and whose legs will still take them to the tops of the higher hills where blue grouse usually hang out in October, have been getting their share of birds. Those who have continued to prowling the slash and lower valleys have been lucky to come home with one or two.

Early-season hunting through Vancouver Island equalled the poorest in living memory. And although October results have been close to normal, it can in no way be considered a good season.

To those of us whose knowledge of blue grouse is mostly gained from a few trips into the woods each fall, it seemed logical to believe that something had happened between the optimistic days of June and the opening of the hunting season to drastically trim the blue grouse broods.

Berry Crop Below Average

There were many theories.

Last winter's unusually early and severe cold snap was the favored culprit. Blackberry, salal and other plants were damaged so heavily, it was said, that this summer's berry crop was far below average and young birds died from lack of food.

The warm, dry summer also took its share of blame for drying up berries and leaving the birds without sufficient food on the nesting grounds.

Disease was also considered. Grouse are highly susceptible to many parasites that can take a big toll of young birds.

It was known that the blues left their summer range several weeks ahead of their normal schedule but few were willing to believe that some silent killer hadn't invaded their ranks.

Our game biologists assure us it isn't so.

Biologists have a wonderful faculty for explaining things. They can use technical terms in a comforting way that makes an apparently serious situation seem almost normal. Theirs is a knowledge that comes from years of study, augmented by fact and surveys. And time has proved them more often right than wrong.

No Apparent Cause for Worry

Don Robinson, regional game biologist at Nanaimo, says there is no apparent cause for worry over our blue grouse population.

Field surveys taken in the spring and summer showed good numbers of blue grouse and a satisfactory early hatch of healthy chicks. Few dead birds were found and there was no reason to suspect an abnormal mortality rate among young grouse.

The dry summer, says Don, started the grouse on their annual migration by mid-August. Biologists believe they are up in higher timber in close to their usual numbers, most of them safe from all but the more ambitious hunters and not due to come down until next spring.

From personal experience this season, it appears that the biologists probably will again be proven right.

On five trips in the Sooke district I took 16 blues, including one limit. While this was not a high score, it corresponded favorably with what the section had yielded in previous years.

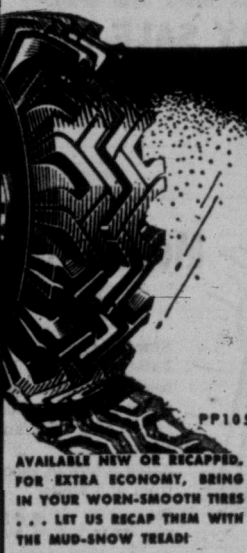

In another way it was unusual. Of the grouse taken, only three were young birds. Five were hens and eight were adult hooters. Young birds usually make up by far the largest portion of the hunting kill and two hens are normally downed for each hooter.

While a count on 16 birds cannot be considered indicative, it is still difficult to shake the feeling that young grouse might have taken a beating last summer.

As Don Robinson says, we won't know the answer until surveys are made on the nesting grounds next spring. Until then we can only hope.

Bomber Stars One-Two in WFU Scoring

WINNIPEG (CP)—Halback Buddy Leake of Winnipeg Blue Bombers lost his lead in the individual scoring race in one Western Interprovincial Football Union weekend game but regained it in the second.

Teammate Bob McNamara roared to a record-tying six touchdowns Saturday as Bombers downed B.C. Lions 40-8 to push his total points for the season to 78 while Leake picked up four converts to drop to the runner-up spot with 76. But in Monday's losing 21-11 effort against Edmonton Eskimos, Leake scored a touchdown and a convert while McNamara went scoreless.

Statistics compiled by The Canadian Press for games including Oct. 15 show that Leake now has 83 points on eight touchdowns, 2 converts, three field goals and one single.

Missing All-Star Game Big Break for Detroit

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

General Manager Jack Adams figures his Detroit Red Wings got off to a fine start in the National Hockey League this season because they didn't have to worry about the league's all-star game.

Each year the defending Stanley Cup champions opposed the league's All-Stars in a pre-season engagement. For the first time in three seasons the Wings were not the Stars' opposition. Montreal Canadiens, who ended Detroit's two-year championship streak last spring, took on the All-Stars Oct. 9 and battled to a 1-1 draw.

"In the past when we had to build a team for the all-star game we had to step on it," Adams says. "This season that pressure was off and we were able to analyze, juggle and experiment a great deal more than in other years."

"I think we benefited from the extra time we were able to put in at training camp. The records of our first three league games show that. Last fall we had to play in the all-star game and we got off to our worst start in 20 years."

Wings are in first place with three victories in as many games for six points. Toronto Maple Leafs and Boston Bruins are tied for second spot with three points. New York Rangers and Canadiens have two points while Chicago Black Hawks hold their usual cellar position, winless in three games.

Coach Phil Watson, who watched his Rangers get beaten 2-1 by Wings last Sunday, agrees that Detroit is stronger.

"Maybe it's Detroit's year again," he says. "These Wings are in perfect shape. I watched them on television against Toronto Saturday and they really outclassed the Leafs. They outclassed us, too."

"In both games they seemed to tire after the first period but they still had enough. I don't say we won't still take Detroit on the season. But they do look as though they've got another big team."

Rangers nearly beat out Detroit last season for second spot, losing it by two points.

The Blueshirts open their home season tonight against Boston in the only game. Leafs are at Detroit and Hawks visit Montreal in Thursday night's games.

Wings will be without right winger Bill Dineen and Alex Delvecchio when they tangle with Leafs. Dineen suffered a knee injury last Thursday and will be out for another week.

Delvecchio isn't expected back for at least seven more weeks.

Prices Stand Still On Slow Toronto

The stock market at Toronto was just about at a standstill as far as prices were concerned near the close of trading today.

It opened slightly higher, but began drifting down after the first hour of trading. By mid-afternoon prices seemed to stop going in any direction.

The market continued lower in quiet trading, but rails advanced against the trend.

AT TORONTO Consolidated Halliwell was an active trader in the closing minutes and moved ahead 21 cents to $2.26.

Other coppers, however, moved in a narrower range. Chibougamau Mining slipped 20 cents and a half dozen other stocks lost about 10 cents. There were a few scattered issues showing small gains.

Aluminum and MacLaren Power and Paper lost two points. Other stocks on the downside included Chato Steel, Chrysler, General Motors, Canada Cement and Argus. Trans Mountain, Ogilvie, Canadian General Investments were a few winners.

AT NEW YORK Steels backed away from their rise of Tuesday as Republic dropped about a point. U.S. Steel and Bethlehem major fractions.

Most Canadian issues were lower on the New York exchange. Aluminum Ltd. was off 2 1/2. McIntyre lost 1/4. International Nickel slipped 1/4. Walker-Gooderham was down 1/4. Hudson Bay Mining advanced 1/4. Canadian issues were quiet.

AT MONTREAL Price and Great Lakes added 1/4 in the papers while McCall firm 1/4 among refining oils. Base Metals were mixed, with Hudson Bay up 1/4 and Aluminium off 2 points.

Power Corporation and B.C. Telephone climbed 1/4 on the utilities list. Banks and beverages were mixed under 1/4-point while steels recorded little movement.

AT LONDON The stock market was firm and active today and business broadened.

Apart from a certain amount of optimism regarding the Suez Canal situation there was little to help sentiment. British funds continued to make progress and gains of up to 5/16 were recorded. Oil shares, however, lacked a decided trend.

TODAY'S GRAIN PRICES

CHICAGO (AP)—A moderate demand and an absence of selling pressure combined to send grains higher on the board of trade today.

A burst of buying got the market off to a good start. Prices turned downward in mid-morning on news Yugoslavia might not accept American economic aid. Toward the finish a new buying flurry sent prices to the day's best levels.

BETWEEN TIMES

By
MONTE ROBERTS

We herewith announce the winner of the tinsel-plated syrup server for the most saccharine "news" story of the year.

It goes to the Reuters reporter—mercifully anonymous—who perpetrated this gob of spun-sugar candy:

"ARUSHA, Tanganyika (Reuters)—Princess Margaret today flashed a brilliant smile at her first meeting with a British district commissioner named Francis Townsend.

"Francis Townsend, brother of her rejected suitor, Group Capt. Peter Townsend, met Margaret at a Baraza tribal meeting of 40,000 fierce Masai warriors.

"As Townsend stepped to the dais to shake her hand, Margaret looked him full in the eyes and smiled warmly. And when the Baraza was over, the princess looked back from her car in Townsend's direction."

In addition to the tinsel-plated syrup server, the unidentified reporter is in line for an all-expenses paid trip to the moon, given for the year's finest flight of fancy.

Naturally, Margaret looked this Townsend full in the eyes and smiled warmly.

After all, for better than 20 years, she has been taught to look people in the eyes and smile warmly, whether the name happens to be Townsend, Tompkins, or Chief Wombly Mombly of Lower Bachuanaland.

And as for looking back over her shoulder as her car drove off, the accomplished princess is much too good a troupier to turn her back to the audience if it can be avoided.

Or possibly she didn't care where she was going, she just wanted to see where she had been.

If I seem a little snarly on this matter, it is because I am fed to the teeth with the marshmallowy writing of reporters who are either star struck or complete hypocrites.

And I suspect the latter.

I have the highest regard for the hard-working Royal Family, and the deepest sympathy for the arduous, showcase life they are compelled to lead, in the interests of commonwealth solidarity.

But I have no use whatsoever for descriptions of warm smiles, fleeting glances, sad eyes and other fancied signs of emotional strain which exist largely in the maudlin minds of these alleged reporters.

In regard to news of the Royal Family, just as in regard to other news, let us stick to facts.

And let Peter Townsend go for his trip around the world accompanied by an occasional small paragraph back of the classified ads.

I thank you.

Cat Limit Proposed In City

A by-law to limit the number of cats which may be kept by any one city householder is under consideration by city parks committee.

The committee today received a petition asking some action be taken against a Duchess Street resident who allegedly keeps 20 to 30 cats.

The petitioners, 13 neighbors, state the cats are a nuisance, unsanitary, uproot gardens.

The committee, headed by Ald. Robert Macmillan, resolved to ask the Cats' Protection League here to recommend a limit to apply. At present there is a city regulation which limits dog-owners to five canine pets.

The committee was told the problem is not new to the city. Recently pound authorities were required to dispose of 35 cats when the woman owner was sent to hospital and could not care for them.

Another letter to the committee recommended dog licence fees be raised to $15 or $20 to discourage keeping of dogs in the city. Resident W. R. Walters complained of free-running dogs. He will be advised to report any violation of regulations governing dogs to the pound.

Tot Puts Car In Gear, Runs Over Boy

Four Victoria and district children were admitted to the Royal Jubilee Hospital Tuesday afternoon following three accidents involving two bicycles and a car.

All are in favorable condition today, the hospital reported. At Sooke, one-year-old Stephen Radford precipitated an accident which injured himself and James Hamilton, nine, about 4 p.m., as he was being placed in the family car by his mother, Mrs. Clarence Radford.

The car was parked in its driveway with engine running and the child apparently moved the automatic gear shift lever, sending the car rolling in reverse.

It threw Mrs. Radford away from the door and rolled over the Hamilton boy before coming to rest.

Stephen has a head injury and bruises, and the other boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hamilton, neighbors, has bruises and scratches.

At about 12:30 p.m., Terry Turner, nine, 1712 Denman, was thrown over the handle bars of his bicycle near 1611 Bay and taken to hospital with a groin injury.

Victoria Ambulance took 12-year-old Denis Clemett, Beach Drive, Brentwood, to Jubilee with a head injury suffered in a tumble from his bicycle about 4 p.m.

Malahat Lookout Site Possible Picnic Spot

Property of the old Malahat Lookout, not the Malahat Chalet, will be considered by the provincial parks department as a picnic site.

A report Tuesday referred to the property, suggested by Victoria Publicity—Commissioner G. I. Warren for development, as the burned-out chalet site.

The Malahat Chalet is still in operation. The Malahat Lookout burned to the ground some years ago.

B.C. Seeks Improved Highway Deal

British Columbia is trying to make a better deal with Ottawa before signing the new Trans-Canada Highway agreement.

Deadline for signing the agreement, which provides for higher federal contributions, is Dec. 9.

Highways Minister P. A. Gagliardi said today B.C. is trying to have the new Upper Levels Highway from West Vancouver to Horseshoe Bay considered part of the Trans-Canada network.

The minister said an attempt also will be made to get Ottawa to recognize the new Second Narrows Bridge as part of the system.

"If we can't include the Second Narrows Bridge, we should be able to include everything on the north shore because this section of the highway is part of a sea route (Horseshoe Bay ferry traffic to Vancouver Island)," said Mr. Gagliardi.

THREE UNSIGNED

B.C. is one of three provinces which hasn't yet signed Trans-Canada Highway agreements. The others are Quebec and Newfoundland.

Mr. Gagliardi stressed there is no dispute with Ottawa. "We will sign the agreement before the Dec. 9 deadline," he said. "We are simply trying to negotiate the best possible deal for B.C."

He said Premier Bennett will discuss the highway agreement on a forthcoming visit to Ottawa.

The new Trans-Canada agreement calls for Ottawa to pay 50 per cent of construction cost, but on vital sections this contribution will be boosted to as high as 90 per cent. Under the old agreement, costs were split evenly.

1960 TARGET

The 4,600-mile road is to be completed coast-to-coast by 1960. Latest available figures show that of the 4,580 total Trans-Canada mileage, 1,991 miles had been graded and 1,392 paved up to last Aug. 31. And from 1950 until last Oct. 6 the provinces had committed a total of $290,783,020 for highway work of which the federal share was $147,672,200, including provision for the 90-per cent formula where applicable.

MUCH DONE ALREADY

Of the paving, 185 miles has been done in British Columbia, where construction costs have run as high as $1,000,000 a mile because of the rugged terrain. B.C. has also graded 292 miles of highway.

Grading - paving mileage totals for other provinces up to last August: Alberta 220,210; Saskatchewan 389,325; Manitoba 181,187; Ontario 438,369; New Brunswick 75,677; Prince Edward Island 66,49; Nova Scotia 51,0; Newfoundland 237,0.

In addition 162 bridges have been completed, including 41 in British Columbia alone.

Extra Towel Racks a Help When You've Extra Guests

By PENNY SAVER

When guests arrive, there are dozens of little things that must be done to assure comfort. For one, there's the laying out of fresh and pretty towels. Here, we run into difficulty, for there may be plenty of towels and such, but where to hang them up? Even a large bathroom will look cluttered with towels hanging over shower rods and tubs.

Extra towel bars are the answer, it would seem. Just buy a few. It's as simple as that! Rubber coated bars with strong suction cups to attach them to the wall are easily removed once the house is back to normal. Perhaps you'll find a place for them in the kitchen, pantry or maybe you'll find that you need them all the time right where you've put it, in the bathroom.

TODAY'S RECIPE

CHEESE-ONION PIE

Ingredients: 1½ cups water, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ cup uncooked white rice, ¼ teaspoon curry powder, ½ cup melted butter or margarine, 1½ cups cracker crumbs, 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 2 cups thinly sliced onions (half large slices), 1 cup milk, 2 eggs (beaten), 1½ cups grated sharp cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon curry powder, ½ teaspoon black pepper.

Method: Put the water, 1 teaspoon salt and rice in a 2-quart saucepan. Bring to a vigorous boil. Turn the heat down low. Cover and simmer over this low heat 14 minutes. Remove the saucepan from the heat and leave the lid on until ready to use, at least 10 minutes.

While the rice cooks, add the 1½ cups melted butter. Pour over and through the cracker crumbs. (Crums are easily made by rolling crackers between layers of waxed paper or putting through a fine bladed food chopper.) Press the crumbs over the bottom and sides of a greased deep 10-inch round pie plate holding about 6 cups.

Melt the 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a saucepan. Add the onions and cook slowly until tender and slightly yellow. Spread over the bottom of the pie plate.

After the rice cooks, stir in the milk, eggs, cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, curry powder and black pepper. Mix well. Pour over the onions. Bake in a pre-heated 325° F. oven for 45 minutes or until a knife inserted in the centre comes out clean. It is important that the oven is at 325° F. and not too hot. Allow to stand several minutes before cutting into wedges. This recipe makes 8 servings.

Clothing Collected—At a recent meeting of Florence Nightingale Chapter, IODE, articles of used clothing were collected for the Save the Children Fund and a donation was made to the Korean Milk Fund. Plans were made for the annual bazaar and tea in late November.

On Etiquette

About Getting Rid of Guests. Is there a gracious way to get rid of dinner guests who stay till all hours? My husband and I get up early to go to our respective jobs and feel awful the next day if we don't get our required amount of sleep.

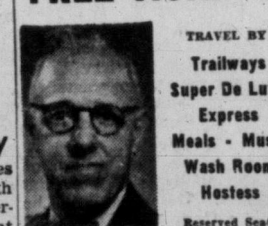

One night my husband calmly announced at midnight that he was going to bed, and did so. Nevertheless, one guest remained till two o'clock in the morning. Tell me how to handle the situation.

Louise Davis Answers:

Plan to have dinner guests on a Saturday night when you don't have to get up so early the next morning. One way to hint that it's time to go home is to cease being a stimulating conversationalist or to create a situation where your guests might begin to be bored. Another suggestion is to serve no after-dinner alcoholic beverages which make some people garrulous and stimulated.

I feel that I must admonish your husband. He was the worst offender by going to bed. When husband and wife are host and hostess, it should be do-or-die until the last guest departs. It is their responsibility and obligation. They should allow for such unintentional thoughtlessness of their guests who may be enjoying themselves so much that they are unaware of the late hour.

WHY GROW OLD?

By JOSEPHINE LOWMAN

While the general public is much better nourished today than ever before, the majority of people do not yet apply to their daily lives the facts now known about nutrition.

Last spring at the New England Conference on Human Nutrition which met in Boston, Dr. James M. Hunley (Chief, Laboratory Research, National Institute of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases, National Institute of Health, Bethesda, Md.) told us that teen-agers, over-weights, and older people, are the poorest nourished of all.

The idea that a person who is fat must be healthy is a fallacy. Often overweights are anaemic and tired because of malnourishment in spite of their extra pounds. The fact that they are obese may indicate that they have eaten so much and so many of the devitalized high caloric foods that little appetite or space remains for adequate amounts of the foods necessary for good nutrition.

All sorts of luscious tidbits, inbetween meal snacks, rich desserts, sauces, salad dressings, gravy and fried foods, may have dulled the wish for essential foods and piled on the pounds.

I have written recently about why teen-agers frequently are malnourished. This is mainly a matter of inbetween meal snacks and irregular meals.

It is easy to see why the older person might fall into this trap. Physical activity has decreased and the individual actually needs less food. This makes it even more important that the food he does eat is the right kind. Lack of appetite may be a problem.

Also many older people live alone. They no longer have hungry younger members of the family for whom to plan and prepare food. Only a real interest in good nutrition will make the effort to get variety in the diet seem worthwhile.

Older people may find chewing a problem because of loss of teeth. Dental defects should be remedied and, when necessary, baby foods can be used. Meats are available in these as well as vegetables.

Many folks think of certain of the protective foods as essential only for the young. Actually what was good nutrition in youth is good nutrition in older years. The older generations need these foods for repair and maintenance if not for growing. Milk is one of the foods which often is neglected, yet the average individual of 65 is calcium poor.

Nutrition is a lifetime and an important job!

Between Ourselves

By ELIZABETH FORBES

A proud wife sat in the Crystal Ballroom at the Empress Hotel last evening where the Cassenti Players presented a delightful program of music for woodwinds and horn. She was Mrs. George Zukerman.

Married to the clever young bassoon player who also is leader of the quintet that includes flute, clarinet, oboe and French horn, Mrs. Zukerman flew from Vancouver in the early evening to hear the concert.

"It's a long time since I've been at a concert where my husband was playing," she explained, "but, as the quintet is a fairly new venture—and he is so proud of it—I had to come."

It sounds easy when you say that Mrs. Zukerman flew from the mainland for the concert. In her case, however, it meant a lot of planning and some re-arrangement—as far as her own work is concerned.

No—she isn't a musician. "One in the family is enough," she says with an attractive shrug. Then with a proud lift of her head, "especially when he is as talented as my husband."

This vivacious young woman is a social worker with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. Her work includes such extra-curricular duties as speaking for the CNIB of an evening.

That's what she was slated to do last night.

When she discovered husband George was bringing his quintet here to play a first concert of the season under the auspices of the Victoria Musical Art Society she found a substitute to take her place and, in her own words, quietly spoken, "I came to Victoria."

Travelled to Israel With Husband

The Zukermans have been married for some years now. Soon after the wedding they went to New York, George's home city, then to Israel, where he fulfilled an engagement with the Israel Symphony Orchestra, then back to New York. For the past three years they have been in Vancouver, where this talented young man is now a member of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra.

"We've just bought a house out Kerrisdale way," Mrs. Zukerman confessed with excitement. "It's quite different. Very modern. There are few inside walls. Just angles. It reminds me of a New York penthouse—only down on the ground."

She sat pensively for a moment, looking into space. Then her brown eyes sparkled. "George loves it," she said—and you judge that what George loves is all right with her.

Any children? "No!" Mrs. Zukerman tells you, "only a Siamese cat. And I can tell you, she is worse than any child. She runs the house."

Mrs. Zukerman was wearing a knitted dress of white wool with a knitted bolero of black wool. Carrying out the winter white theme were her eyeglasses which had heavy white rims in the pixy shape. Touching her fingers gently to the soft wool of her dress Mrs. Zukerman said, "George chose this dress for me and when I have it on he absolutely beams. I thought tonight might be a good time to wear it. What do you think?"

Watching George Zukerman's darkly mobile face and noting the way his eyes returned again and again to his wife as she sat in the front row of the hall, I was sure Mrs. Zukerman guessed right.

"Of course I like music, even if I am not a musician," was Mrs. Zukerman's answer to the obvious question. She confessed, however, that cooking is her hobby. Her pride and her joy, for that matter.

"I love to cook for people who enjoy good eating," she said, "and George and his friends do love good food."

Mrs. Zukerman doesn't like to talk about herself but mention her husband and you unleash a torrent of words. You hear of his work with the symphony. The pride he has in the quintet. His writings. "He has had many things printed, you know, and they are very good" . . . and his work with CBC . . . "he has done many talks for radio and for TV."

"You can see it is exciting being married to a man like my husband," she concludes.

And looking at her earnest face and her happy smile, I am willing to concede that she is right.

Family-Arranged Marriages Best, Says Iranian Student

GUELPH, Ont. (CP) — Dark-haired Mary Shukri from Baghdad, who now is familiar with the freedom women here have in choosing their own husbands, says she still prefers Iraq's family-arranged marriages.

"I think our way is best," she said. "It's not as romantic but in Iraq the divorce rate is only two of 100 marriages."

Miss Shukri, the first student from Iraq to study at Macdonald Institute, said that if an Iranian girl is opposed to marrying the man her family has chosen for her she needn't marry him.

"At first I was dubious about going out alone on dates," she said. "At home a respectable girl wouldn't think of it but here I find it is the thing to do."

Holder of a B. Sc. in chemistry, Miss Shukri is studying food and Mrs. B. Leigh and Mrs. W. W. nutrition here, planning to teach home economics when she returns to Iraq.

During her first year on this continent she has conducted a home economics survey in Washington, D.C., has spent two weeks on a Virginia farm and took a six-week biochemistry course at Cornell University.

Colored Slides — Mrs. D. E. Alcorn showed colored slides of her trip through Japan at a meeting of the Servimus Group of Metropolitan United Church. Mrs. A. H. Adams presided and Mrs. P. Bewell took the devotional period. Mrs. A. H. Lamont was program convener. Plans were made for the annual fall bazaar in November. Tea was served by Mrs. F. C. Leakey, Mrs. B. Leigh and Mrs. W. W. Veil.

Installation of Missile Guns Studied for Canada's Arctic

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Defence planners now are beginning to study the possibility of installing anti-aircraft missile batteries in the Canadian Arctic.

They say establishment and maintenance of such a defensive system would be immeasurably simpler than trying to base fighter squadrons in the far North.

Gen. Charles Foulkes, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said in a recent speech that enemy bombers would have to be intercepted beyond the settled parts of Canada to avoid the effects of radioactive fall-out on Canadian cities.

Officials say that to accomplish this more radar, the supersonic CF-105 jet fighter and ground-to-air led missiles will have to be introduced into the air defence system. Introduction of more radar and the CF-105 equipped with atomic-head guided missiles will come about the same time.

Anti-aircraft missiles are not expected to arrive on the Canadian scene until around 1960. They will supplement but not replace fighter planes. They will have a range of 200 to 300 miles and be capable of carrying atomic warheads.

Residual Effects of Tally-Ho, Hens, Rabbits Worry Health Bd.

More restrictive regulations governing operation of tally-hos and keeping of poultry and rabbits in urban areas were recommended Tuesday by Victoria-Esquamalt Union Board of Health.

The board recommended that the city either undertake to sweep tally-ho routes three times a day, including Saturdays and Sundays, or require the tally-ho operators to be responsible for this service as a term of licensing.

At the same time, councils of Esquamalt and Victoria will be asked to amend present poultry by-laws to permit inspectors to clamp down on persons who keep chickens, or rabbits in an unsatisfactory manner.

Sanitary inspector Elwood Gropp asked first for a total ban on keeping poultry or rabbits in the city but was opposed by Richard Reeve, school board representative on the board.

Mr. Gropp also suggested a $5 inspection fee. It was decided, however, to merely ask councils to enforce higher standards of cleanliness. Mr. Gropp is to bring in suggested regulations.

It was felt by some members that to keep chickens properly fed and housed at today's costs would make a small city poultry operation unprofitable.

The health board made it clear no objection was being taken to tally-hos despite earlier announcements that the board would discuss curtailment of the tourist attraction because of manure littering city streets.

Mr. Gropp said there have been many complaints about the manure on the street and said after the meeting that although health authorities opposed a total ban such action had been discussed.

Natural Gas for Valley Towns By November; Chilliwack to Wait

TWO-ALARM FIRE

VANCOUVER — A two-alarm fire that broke out in the Vancouver Tile Company, Ltd., on Main Street, early today, caused heavy damage as it spread to two adjoining business premises. The blaze spread to the Main Spot Coffee Shop and the D. & H. Products, on either side of the premises.

The fire raged out of control for nearly an hour and was brought under control at 6:52 a.m. after a second alarm had called out off-shift firemen.

STUDY OF OFFICE AUTOMATION MAY BRING EDUCATION CHANGES

VANCOUVER (CP)—Tom Alsbury, vice-president of the Vancouver Trades and Labor Council, is conducting a survey into automation in office work which some observers say may mean "sweeping changes in the province's commercial education system."

Mr. Alsbury, who is also a school principal here, said the special survey is "urgent" because automation "is beginning to take over" everywhere.

Billy Bunter Revived

LONDON—Billy Bunter is a voice out of the past for anyone who had his youth in the generation ago in England or the English-type Dominions such as Australia and New Zealand. He was the typical fat boy of an English public school and with his pals, Harry Wharton, Bob Cherry, Frank Nugent and Hurrey Singh, he featured in boys' stories about Greyfriars School.

I think Billy Bunter's class was the Upper Sixth at Greyfriars because I seem to remember some joke of my youth about his being in the Double Sixth at St. Dominos.

Having had his hour of glory in the 1920s, he dropped out of the limelight before the war, when boys turned to other heroes. Now of a sudden I hear young Mac and his friends full of talk about Billy Bunter and Co., using again those old Bunter phrases—"I say, you rotters!", "Leggo, you chumps!"

Reason he has taken a new lease of life is that he has been embraced by television and there's a series of his escapades every Sunday night.

I thought at first that some bright young television script writer had had the idea of reviving Billy Bunter for a new generation. But not at all. I learn these scripts are written by Frank Richards, the man who invented Bunter and his crew half a century ago!

Richards sold his first Bunter story

in 1906. Eighty years of age now, he is still a bachelor and looks upon Bunter and the other boys of Greyfriars as his family.

"They are more real to me than real people," he says. "I'm no longer an old man when I start to write. Sometimes on a winter's day when my thoughts are with the boys of Greyfriars out in the blazing sun on the cricket field, I look up and see snow falling outside, and it gives me quite a shock."

Fortunate man, Frank Richards, and a rarity. So often a person achieves fame in some field of endeavor in his younger days, as Richards did with his creation of Bunter, and then in later life he winds up forgotten and penniless or coasting through the remainder of his life harking back to the days when he was something big. But here's Frank Richards, at 80, back among the Big Names again. He must feel life has been very kind to him.

Kennels where you can park your dog when you are away on holiday are one thing, but here's something new. Fellow named Edgar Ford, of London's Swiss Cottage district, started this summer a holiday home for indoor plants. You park your geranium or creeping ivy, or whatever it happens to be, with Ford and for the equivalent of 25 cents a week he'll treat it with loving care while you're away.

Six hundred holiday-goers took advantage of this service during the past summer and already 50 plant owners have made bookings for when they're away over Christmas.

YOUR HEALTH

By DR. WALTER C. ALVAREZ

Better Choice of Parents

Dr. Walter C. Alvarez is Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic and Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation.

Many thoughtful persons ask if there shouldn't be a law against the bearing of children by persons who carry some hereditary disease, which is likely to appear in one or two out of every four of the children they may bring into the world. Often these children have to suffer terribly all their days. Many of them have to be brought up and supported by the community, and the bill for their care in just one state runs into millions of dollars.

An answer to these questions was given recently by Dr. B. Glass, in the Johns Hopkins Hospital magazine. As he said, there is no question that states would be justified in saying that certain persons, such as feeble-minded girls, should not be allowed to run around bearing one illegitimate child after another, usually sired by some good-for-nothing man. Such feeble-minded girls can easily be sterilized without any harm to them.

Anyone who would like to know what large sums the care of the descendants of just one such woman can cost should read two books, one by Dugdale and one by Esterbrook, telling about the Jukes, a family of degenerates living in New York State. A large percentage of the members of this family have been petty thieves, vagrants, alcoholic bums, and prostitutes.

The great objection to any eugenic plan is that the brothers and sisters of a feeble-minded girl can carry and transmit the mental defect just as well as the girl can, and they are not likely to consent to sterilization unless they are trained in science or in the breeding of fine animals.

MANY WOULD CHOOSE RIGHT

It would, of course, be wonderful if all persons who are carriers of some serious mental or nervous or muscular disease could know the tremendous danger that will come to some of the children they may have. Doubtless then, many of these persons would choose not to have any children. I see many women who say, "I would never have a child because I would not run the risk of condemning someone to suffer as terribly as I and some of my brothers and sisters have suffered."

Dr. Alvarez

To show how dangerous it is for two persons with a similar poor inheritance to marry, a friend of mine, whose uncle was an epileptic, married a lovely woman whose aunt was an epileptic. Both of these parents, and all four of the grandparents were fine, able and sensible persons, but apparently my friend and perhaps his wife were carriers of nervous disease.

One of the next great problems in medicine that we humans must tackle is the problem of apparently normal carriers of disease. Let two of them marry and almost all of their children can suffer terribly. A point that I have to make to all people with serious nervous disease who ask me about marrying, is that no genetics counselor will tell them not to have children. All a counselor does is to tell the people what the chances are that they will have defective children. Then, if they want to go ahead and take the risk, that is their decision. I wish to emphasize this point so that a number of people will not write me angrily to say that I had no right to forbid them to marry. I never in my life forbade anyone to marry.

HEPATITIS

Dozens of people want to know what to do for hepatitis. Usually, by the time they know they have it, the inflammation is over with and all that is left is some scarring of the liver.

Hepatitis was a common disease of soldiers during the war. It was due to either one of two viruses. The one of ordinary epidemic jaundice generally produces a mild form of the disease which does not need any treatment, and is not followed by serious results. In some cases the other virus produces severe damage to the liver, and then the end-result may be what is called cirrhosis or hardening of the fibrous of the liver.

Since the Second World War, the medical literature has been full of articles on hepatitis and I have read dozens of them. The impression I get is that there is no good drug treatment for the disease, and no special diet worth trying. Some time ago U.S. army physicians who had treated hundreds of these cases wrote that the best diet was a good full generous one, such as will maintain the soldier's nutrition at a high level.

If I had a severe form of hepatitis about all I would know to do would be to pray that I would be left enough good liver tissue so that I could live on in comfort for the rest of my days.

University Aid From Business Urged on CCC

QUEBEC (CP)—Businessmen and prosperous people in general should be willing to put up money to support their freedom, Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, president of Acadia University, Wolfville, N.S., said today in an address to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

Universities are in grave financial difficulties, he said, and if the survival of these centres of intellectual freedom were really of importance, why should not businessmen come to the rescue of university budgets?

If every firm in Canada would contribute one per cent of its gross profit each year to a fund for Canadian universities, the benefit would be incalculable.

Capt. Joseph Jeffrey of London, Ont. president of London Life Insurance Company, a member of the panel, said there can be little question that considerably more inflation is in store, and an economist had estimated that by the year 2,000—only 44 years from now—the Canadian dollar might be worth between 12 and 14 cents.

HOME GARDEN

By HILDA BEASTALL

Plants in Flower Successfully Moved

In the process of planting the foundation of a satisfying spring garden, we quite often are confronted with plants which must be moved though still in bloom.

Some years we have a few degrees of frost in early October. This blackens the foliage of tender plants such as the dahlia and begonia, and hastens the maturing process carried on in the tubers of these plants.

This year they are still blooming. If the spring garden is to be set where these are growing, they can be moved and allowed to mature in another location.

The best procedure to follow with the dahlias is to remove all the flowers and buds first, allowing the leaves to remain. Dig the plants with plenty of soil attached to the roots, and replant closely together in a spare piece of ground. While this is not so ideal as leaving them without disturbance until frost, it is one way of surmounting a problem without sacrificing entirely the effect of the natural maturing process.

With the tuberous begonias, a temporary planting place need not be found. Instead, after digging the tubers with earth attached to roots, pack closely together in a box or corner of a cold frame.

Canna roots may be lifted, and replanted into large pots to finish maturing under cover. After the foliage has yellowed and died down, the tubers may be wintered in the almost dry soil of the pot in a place free from frost.

The maturing process of gladioli should not be hurried. They are better left undisturbed at least until the foliage shows signs of yellowing. Since the soil is likely to be quite wet by the time this yellowing is evident it will be essential to dig the corms quickly after digging. Otherwise many will be lost, for rot sets in rapidly in wet, slowly dried corms.

HITLER HAD DATA IN WEEK

Nazi Spy Snaffled FDR-Churchill Note

LONDON (Reuters)—German spies delivered into Hitler's hands details of a top secret personal message from President Roosevelt to Winston Churchill within a week of its receipt in London.

The message, say captured German foreign ministry documents published here Tuesday, concerned the handing over to Britain of 50 used American destroyers, the supplying of U.S. anti-aircraft guns and ammunition, and steel deliveries.

U.S. Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy delivered the message to Prime Minister Churchill May 16, 1940—19 months before the United States entered the Second World War.

One of the main points made by Roosevelt, say the documents, was that the American fleet at that time was "concentrated at Hail, where it must in any case remain for the moment."

The documents published cover the period from March 18 to June 22, 1940. Seven volumes already have been published in accord with a 1946 Anglo-American agreement.

The German correspondence published yesterday reports on plans for sabotage in the United States, planting of agents within the government in Washington, refusal of the American press to be "bought," and many other details of the Nazi campaign in America.

Hans Thomsen, German charge d'affaires in Washington, reported to Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop in April, 1940, that valuable information had been obtained from "a reliable and tried confidential agent who is very friendly with the director of the code room of the state department."

LOS ANGELES (AP)—College boys are taking politics seriously. Police Tuesday arrested Harold Harold K. Police quoted Kachigan as saying students of Republican persuasion were picketing the rally and he thought sight of the pistol might keep things peaceful.

Weathermen Forced to Rely On Their Corns

OTTAWA (CP)—Meteorologists aboard the navy's patrol ship Labrador were reduced to the "aching corn" method of weather forecasting during an Arctic radio blackout that lasted for several days.

During the September blackout—caused by sunspots—all contact was cut off between the outside world and the patrol ship engaged in a survey of Arctic waters in support of DEW (Distant Early Warning) radar line operations.

Without the usual weather reports radioed from a large surrounding area, it was impossible to produce the weather forecasts needed for safe and efficient operations in the Arctic.

Hence, navy headquarters reported, the Labrador's crew had no warning of the season's first snowstorm that stranded a helicopter and a boat overnight on a beach. They were also surprised by a sudden weather change that brought fast-rising seas and forced two sounding boats to scuttle back to the mother ship from a channel they were surveying.

Radio operators aboard the supply ship, waiting for the airwaves to clear, eyed a mounting pile of outgoing messages that could not be sent. Similar stacks of messages, destined for the Labrador, accumulated in other ships in the area and at the naval radio station at Churchill, Man.

THE EMPTY ROOM

A 3-bedroom home... with TV in the den.

That's our joint... would say Real Estate men; But they never say what the "barn" is like. When off to College, your daughter does hike. And there's an empty room off the hall. It's enuff to make a fellow hawl. I steal in a glance once in awhile. And try to put on a brave sort of smile. As I gather courage & walk inside.

And sort of pick things up, while misty-eyed. I run my hand and take a long look. At her vanity we built in the little nook. With the boudoir lamps she used to love. And such fun. As I toy with some junk in her jewelry case with the mirror we placed above. Across my mug... the film I erase.

As I toy with some junk in her jewelry case with the mirror we placed above. Across my mug... the film I erase.

Then I sit on the bed, my eyes all a-swimmin'. And thumb thru a book called "Little Women". Then I blur at the carpet, shake my dome.

She was SO thrilled, when I first brought it home. "With my curtains Daddy... it goes so well."

My Papa kinda special... and rather swell. I yanked up the window, that So sprawled on the bed, and cried my eyes out. So if YOU'RE all together... have a big ball.

VANCOUVER (CP)—British Columbia contractors, overloaded with work commitments, are submitting contract bids "25 to 60 per cent higher than one should be able to expect," a British Columbia Power Commission official said here Tuesday.

SUPERBLY CHOSEN PROGRAM FOR SMALL AUDIENCE

By AUDREY S.T.D. JOHNSON

For those mostly familiar with and devoted to the music of symphony orchestras and the string ensemble, Tuesday night's recital by the Cassenti Players of Vancouver, must have been something of a revelation.

The woodwind choir—with French horn—is much less seldom heard in chamber concert than it deserves. But with the well co-ordinated and musically performance of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra first desk players, a small Victoria Musical Art audience in the Empress Hotel, heard clearly and explicitly, the range, character and texture of the woodwinds.

George Zukerman, bassoonist and founder of the Cassenti Players, provided commentary on the rather long but superbly chosen program. His easy, informal style accentuated the intimate nature of the performance.

Oboe, clarinet and bassoon are descendants of one of the oldest families of instruments and are recognized by composers as being the perfect combination for the performance of such antiquaries of form as the gavotte, the passacaglia and early rondo. This fact was noticeable in the Sonata for Oboe and Bassoon by the 18th century Nannan, and the Divertimento for oboe, clarinet and bassoon by Mozart.

PLEASINGLY BLENDED

Yet it was interesting to discover that contemporary harmonies are more subtly and pleasingly blended by these instruments, and become more evocative of mood than when played by other groups.

A quintet by Guillaume Balay in the 18th century style, Cinq Pieces en Trio by Ibert and Night Legend for Quintet by Ropartz created some of the more delightful listening of the evening.

The consistent and highly competent playing of this ensemble of five expert instrumentalists at intervals reached a level of inspired performance which was a brilliant indication of what the future holds if the group remains intact.

The technical virtuosity is there, the musicianship and sensitivity to the demands of both composer and instrument.

B.C. Birthday Crest Protected By Law

The official symbol of the B.C. Centennial Committee has been released to all B.C. newspapers and local centennial groups for use during 1958.

The crest, bearing the dates 1858 and 1958, will be carried on all of the committee's official documents. It is protected by law and may only be used with the committee's permission.

"Purpose of the crest goes deeper than mere advertisement," executive secretary Larry McCance said today. "Counterfeit activities have shown up in every type of anniversary celebration with which I have been associated."

PROTECTION

"The crest will protect merchants from buying advertising in souvenir publications which are in no way connected with official planning for British Columbia's 100th birthday."

Designer of the crest is Cyril Connorton, artist foreman at the Queen's Printer. Of it he says:

"The trees are our heritage. The water is symbolic of the sea coast and our mountains are shown, too. The initials B.C. are on top, and the dates of our first 100 years are shown prominently."

"All these surround the provincial emblem of the crown and Union Jack above a glowing sun."

Mr. Connorton, who has been in the lithographic department at the Queen's Printer for 11 years, made a number of trial sketches before arriving at the design chosen by the committee.

Montreal Policemen May Switch to Jeeps

MONTREAL (CP)—City motorcycle police here may switch to touring their beats in jeeps or small sports cars.

Civic executive committee members and police officials Tuesday saw a demonstration by jeeps and a sports car.

Pierre DesMairais, chairman of the executive committee, said if the city could obtain a better vehicle than the motorcycle, it would consider buying it. The change is being contemplated to provide traffic police with maximum comfort, he added.

He has painted British Columbia scenery on hundreds of travel folders and is responsible for the illuminations on scrolls bearing welcome addresses for visiting royalty.
